And Gladly

A display of books vital to their study impels students to make frequent purchases at the Co-Op Bookstore.

Students quickly locate reference material with the aid of the new turnstile system in the North Reserve Room.

From single desks to lengthy tables, the library study facilities accommodate students in their compilation of research.

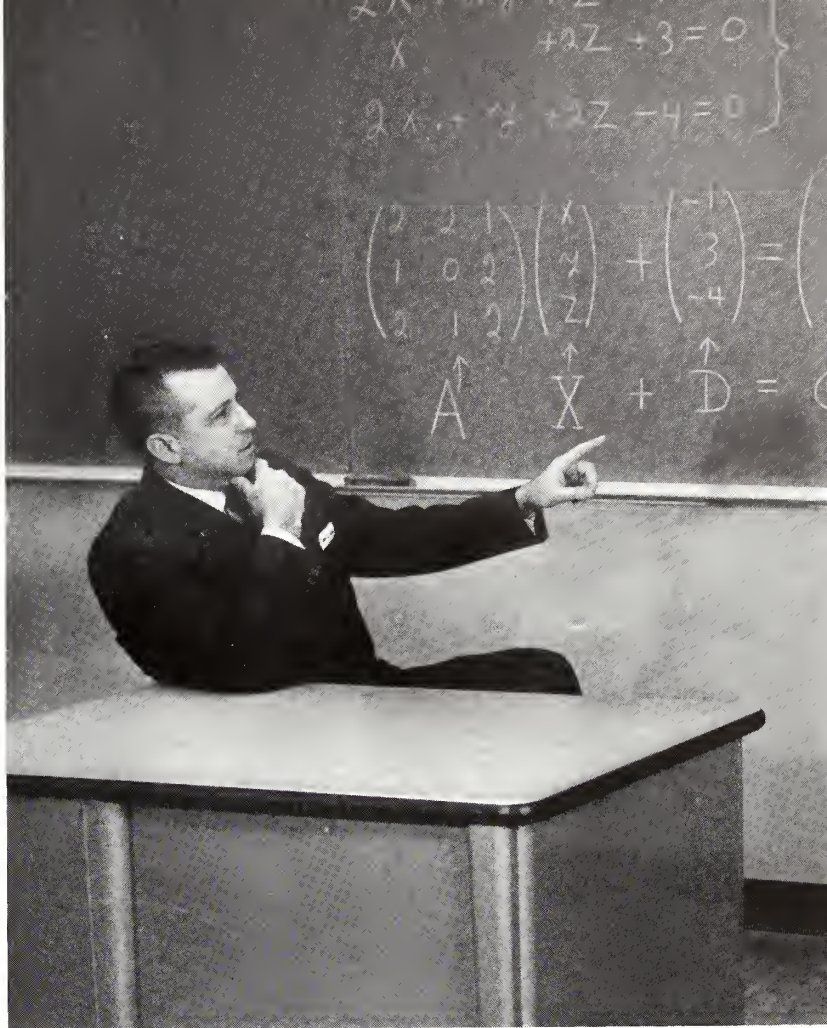

and Gladly Teach . . .

At the University she is the student; at Thomas Metcalf Elementary School she is the student teacher.

Illinois State Normal University is a composite of many things. There are the children in campus laboratory schools, the students in teacher preparation, and a competent faculty. There are classroom facilities and a well-equipped library. In affording social and cultural opportunities, community and campus life includes many organizations to which the student may belong. It is what each student does with these elements that makes him an individual.

Through the University's one hundred and four years of teacher preparation, the goal of Chaucer's clerk has become ours: to gladly learn and gladly teach. The 1961 Index unfolds a four-year development, the step from student to teacher.

Once a student, the instructor trains future teachers.

In the final months before graduation, seniors learn of openings in their teaching fields at the Bureau of Appointments. The preliminaries, filling out credentials, writing applications, and arranging interviews, result in the signing of a contract.

Our Aims . . .

The high school senior makes a decision. Choosing to teach, he pursues instruction from people who represent what he will someday become. The student's first registration at Illinois State Normal University brings a realization that a scope of knowledge, wider than ever before, is available to him. A limit is necessary, and so he decides the major and minor areas in which his study will be concentrated. No matter what field he selects, from a comprehensive elementary major to any of the secondary subjects, he studies education courses which introduce him to, and acquaint him with, the teaching profession.

After the decision is made, the student becomes a part of a new environment. Whether he lives in a dormitory or off campus, he learns from the social world. His associates include people of various backgrounds and cultures, and, in the process of developing friendships, he comes to appreciate their different points of view. The community, too, offers much. The student opens a bank account, explores possibilities for part-time employment, and learns of governmental policies through the local newspaper. He takes advantage of the cultural entertainment that the twin cities, Bloomington-Normal, provide. He joins a church, a factor of great importance in his forming of values. The influences in his new environment all combine toward the development of this individual, preparing him for the day when he will take his place in still another community as a teacher.

Youth, who behold a clown in awe, will grow to appreciate the perspective that humor gives to life.

The world of communication demands fluency in languages other than our own.

A good education consists in giving to the body and to the soul all the beauty and all the perfection of which they are capable.
Plato

Repainted this year in Capen Auditorium, Plato's memorable words give to the student body a paragon of education.

. . . in Theory

Every day, students learn and apply new methods of teaching in the special education building, Fairchild Hall.

Occupying much of a student's time is individual extraction of ideas from a variety of sources.

Through the beginning months of freshman year, the seed of professional training is sown. With its growth comes a deeper sense of responsibility. Understanding that the best teachers are those who have a thorough command of their subject matter, the student, in four short years, accumulates an adequate store of knowledge. More than having a sufficient frame of reference, he observes methods of teaching so that his subject matter will be delivered effectively. Just as important is the upholding of character, for it is the ability to obtain respect from a class which is one of the teacher's greatest attributes. Memorable times come when a student recollects the instructors who whetted his desire with sincerity and dedication.

Even the presentation of campus news causes student reflection which often transfers to problems of world society.

In discussing an issue, a student, faculty, and community forum expresses critical thinking which educated people develop.

. . . and in Practice

Knowledge and dexterity combine to produce quality work, giving satisfaction to the craftsman and pleasure to the layman.

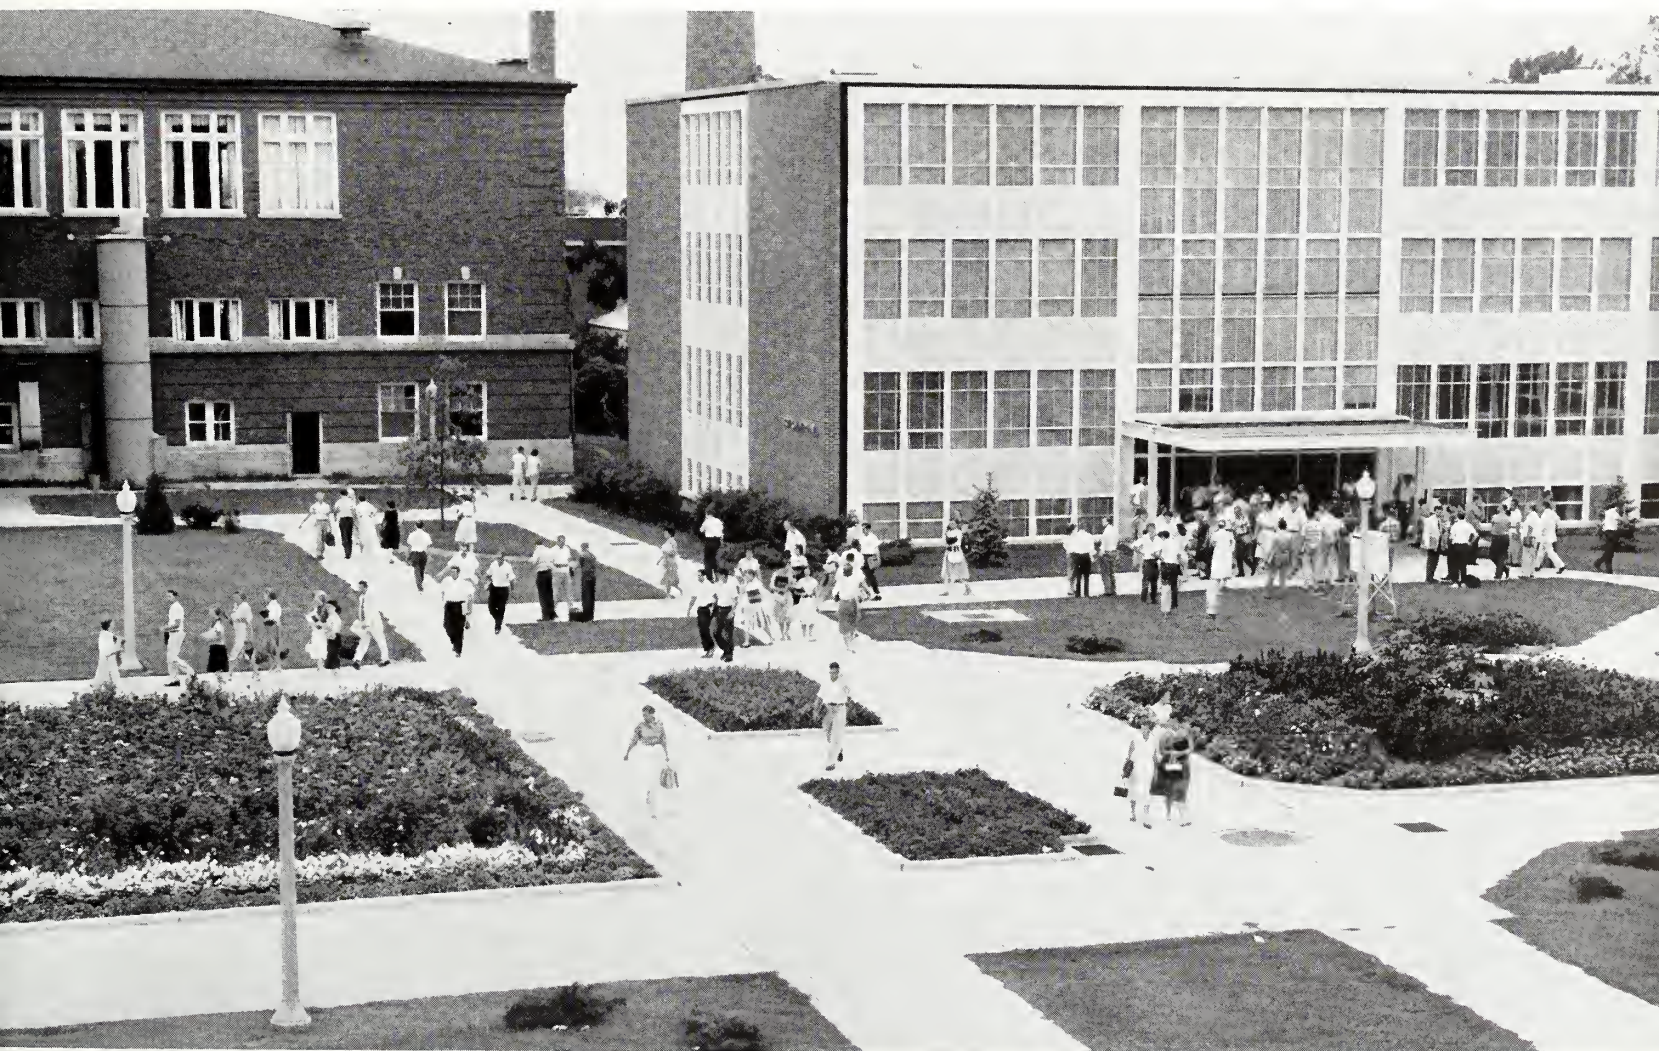

as Students

The acquisition of helpful teaching methods comes not only from observation, but also from diligent study of textbooks and their supplementary material. The student discovers the wisdom in old books; he frequents the Co-Op for paperbacks, and delves into the bound volumes in Milner Library. As he reads various philosophical points of view, he searches his mind and forms his own philosophy of teaching.

Theories gained from textbooks do not lie dormant, but are put into practice. The utilization of principles connected with speaking and writing forms an integral part in the development of communicative skills. Also of importance is the practice gained from health and physical education courses. Here the student is taught the values of keeping his body, as well as his mind, in good condition.

Leaving classrooms in Schroeder Hall, students pursue many destinations. Some head for dorms while others saunter to the library or Cage. Still others, with quickened steps, hurry to the Centennial Building in their ten minutes of time between classes.

Each day brings closer attainment of the goal.

Many academic fields allow the student, as early as his sophomore and junior years, to participate in teaching activities. Even though he may instruct only one lesson a month, he finds that as much learning takes place in this experience as in many weeks of textbook study. With senior status comes student teaching, when he is in full command of classes.

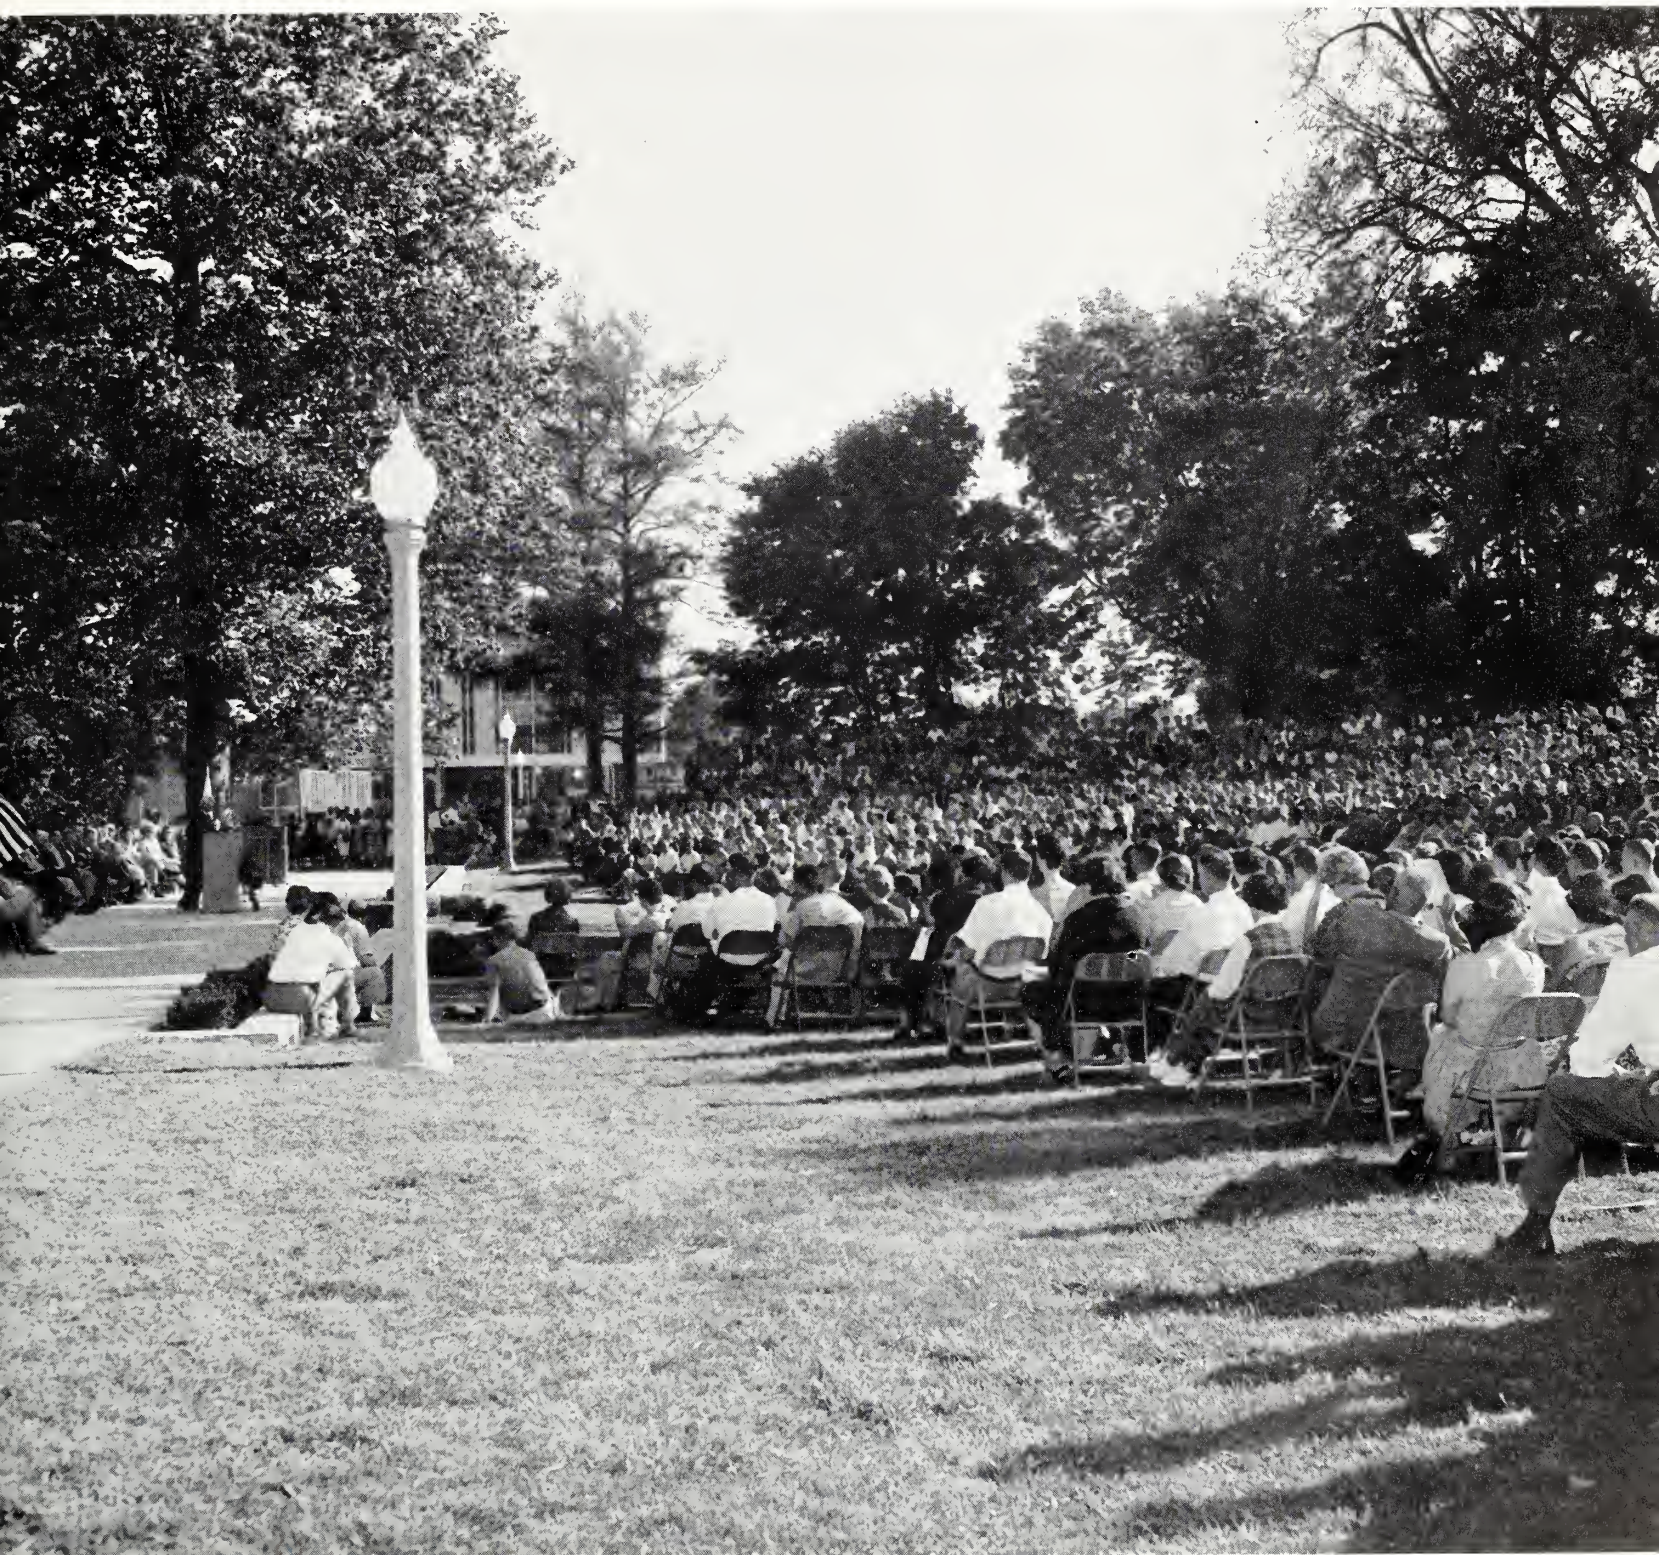

The decision has now run the gamut of learning. The young freshman has matured while completing the cycle of his teacher preparation. As the day approaches when he will receive his degree, frequent trips are made to the Bureau of Appointments where he learns of openings and is introduced to possible future employers. Knowing the qualifications with which the University has provided him, he is confident that his choice can be made with wise discernment. Signing a contract is the realization of his purpose. With graduation, the student completes the four-year evolvement from student to teacher.

At an alumnae tea, association with first-year teachers makes the student eager for the day when he will be teaching.

. . . then Teachers

The first registration was the beginning of student life; graduation day is the entrance into the teaching profession.

Beginning with fiery spirit

Red and white mums brightened fall coats; a "Welcome" sign accented the Union; and smiles in the crowd were of childlike gaiety and of nostalgia. It was Homecoming 1960—the week end of tradition. Planned by senior co-chairmen Nancy Dawson and Al Walgren, it was a week end dedicated to alumni—a time of coffee hours, receptions, and breakfasts, a time to renew college friendships. The unexpected awaited alums. Even those returning from their first year of teaching found that a ten-story dormitory had altered the campus skyline, that McCormick Field had been equipped with lights, and that men had moved into Barton Hall.

Some of the moments of Homecoming belonged only to students, however. Hundreds crowded McCormick Gym for the pep assembly on Thursday Fiercely blazing, the bonfire stimulates and symbolizes its counterpart within the hearts of ISNU alums, faculty, and students—the ever-glowing Homecoming confidence in gridiron victory.

The traditional Friday night snake dance—an endless procession of saddle shoes and sneakers, trench coats and sweatshirts, smiles and laughter, and sometimes determined efforts to grip tighter—opens the Homecoming week end amidst color and excitement.

morning. President Bone flashed his red vest, and Dean Larsen prompted the Redbird team to “forge ahead and fight ferociously.” Tensions mounted. Cheers, speeches, and skits preceded the announcement that Pat was queen. Then, a stunned but happy Miss Pruetzel accepted a bouquet of red roses, and Homecoming 1960 was officially underway.

Friday, panicky people fixed broken tapes, enlisted operators for moving parts, and frantically located the final box of stuffing to make last-minute repairs. Crises were met and dissolved. By 5:00 p.m. the campus had become a veritable Disneyland as the seven dwarfs assumed the stature of Northern’s eleven and were snowed by ISNU; as Dumbo flew over the goal posts; as the threat “U-2” was presented Northern; and as a huge octopus squeezed out victory from the Huskies. It was this pink octopus, “20,000 Leagues Under the Sea,” that captured the first place trophy for Walker Hall. Strong, too, was the competition between off-campus houses, the winner skillfully working into its theme the admonition to vote for the Universities Bond Issue. Seven dwarfs, each with a “yes” vote, marched in front of the house at 309 North Street, singing “Hi-Ho! Hi-Ho! It’s off to Vote We Go.”

The letters ISNU beamed quietly from lighted rooms in Hamilton-Whitten Hall, contrasting the flurry and excitement below. There the snake dance formed, then twisted and turned a circuitous route through the Cage and on to the football field. Students were jerked and pulled, but muscles ached not nearly as much then as they did the day after. A spark issued to kindle the bonfire; a mass pledged their team support no matter how strong and defiant an opponent Northern turned out to be.

Saturday dawned, clear and crisp. A crowd, delighted and expectant, lined the streets of downtown Normal. Children waited excitedly for a big parade. From University Street it wound its way. A huge pumpkin revealed not Peter's wife, but the regal queen Pat Pruetzel and her court, Judy Fairchild, Judy Romary, senior from Kankakee.

Karen Willsey, senior from Pittsfield.

A pink octopus and tropical fish spelled out victory and a first place award for the women of Walker Hall.

A familiar saying, cleverly interpreted, brought to the Junior Class a second place in float competition.

The University Theatre production of Thornton Wilder's "The Skin of Our Teeth" brought to life a drama difficult to stage because of its constant shifting. Sound effects, lighting, and the use of a scrim for time and mood variations achieved realism.

Nancy Johnson, Judy Romary, and Karen Willsey. Winning top float honors was the Junior Class' Mickey Mouse, clutching a champagne bottle and adjuring the Redbirds to "Stop Mousin' Around and Slip 'Em a Mickey."

Northern was a tough foe, and the Huskies triumphed by a score of 20-0. But despite their gridiron defeat alumni, students, and friends planned for the day's culmination—attending Thornton Wilder's play, "The Skin of Our Teeth," in Westhoff Theatre or dancing to the music of Dan Belloc and his Commanders in the University Union Ballroom.

The women had hours, as if at the end of just any day; and Sunday marked the close of Homecoming 1960. But some alumni still lingered, went to churches they had known, and managed to see one more old friend.

Next year, Homecoming will be different. There will be a new turnover of freshman women at "Tall Hall." Sophomores and juniors will be a step nearer their goal. And today's seniors will be among the returning alumni.

For a quarter of a year credited with being the only newsman in Moscow, widely-traveled Irving R. Levine gave to an ISNU audience authoritative, interesting views on Russia.

World famous artists, lecturers, and theatre groups brought color and sparkle to the Entertainment Series. The beauty of grand opera resounded as the New York Opera Festival and a company of sixty-five began the season with Verdi's Rigoletto. Marcel Marceau, world's foremost pantomimist, demonstrated the "Art of Gesture." NBC news correspondent Irving R. Levine revealed first-hand knowledge of the Soviet Union. Agnes DeMille, dancer and choreographer, talked of trends in the American theatre. Thrilling viewers, the Allegro American Ballet Company focused on impressionistic periods of ballet. Claude Frank's icy brilliance characterized his style at the piano. And four members of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra presented an unusual repertoire of "pop" music on the artistic level. The Arts Theatre, a supplement to cultural entertainment, offered such classic films as The Life of Emile Zola and Sadko.

The Cultural Spectrum . . .

Bob Newhart and the Chad Mitchell Trio came unexpectedly, were met enthusiastically, and stayed to satisfy the humorous and musical whims of students who packed Capen Auditorium. Bob was funny; the trio sang; and all four signed autographs.

An undaunted Antigone, captured in the web of Creon's cruelty, expresses courage and determination as she is led to her death.

"ANTIGONE"

The Classic Interpreted . . .

Theatrically-minded students became Jesters through the amassment of hours spent working on University Theatre productions. As Jesters, they continued working, but with the goal of participating in their own play. Against a green backdrop, flanked by modernistic pillars and white furnishings, they presented Sophocles' ageless "Antigone." Following the theory that each generation has its own Antigone, they shaped the classic Greek play into a modern tyrant king-versus-subject theme, with Gary Planck and Carole Reed in lead roles. Viewers watched this clash with the same interest that has held audiences captive for thousands of years.

Even Ismene's concern for her sister will not sway Antigone, who unflinchingly places honor above power of state.

Progressive jazz or the traditional ballad—four bands brought to McCormick Gymnasium a representation of today's trend in music. Ralph Marterie aroused enthusiasm for joining the rapid pace set by the beat of "Skokian." Duke Ellington displayed the quick silver rhythms of his piano in "Perdido" and "Sophisticated Lady." The relatively new Peter Palmer added to his instruments the perfect blending of an effervescent vocal group, enriching the mechanical with the melody of voice. Stan Kenton's quiet charm contrasted with the sonorous quality of his band as it rendered the ever-popular "Artistry in Rhythm." An addition this year provided for the Four Freshmen and a concert under the stars.

A welcome respite from the hectic atmosphere of college life—the moods created by music—caused all to turn their thoughts to a study in rhythm.

Through the Ages

Thirteenth-century friars and monks wandered through the old English countryside, garbed in hooded robes and earning a livelihood by preaching and presenting Biblical plays to the common people. Today, their successors are known as Blackfriars, a fraternity open to all campus men irrespective of creed, nationality, or race, who have a musical, artistic, or dramatic talent.

As in ages past, the modern-day Blackfriars plan an original spring show. During the fall, they began by seeking interested and skilled pledges. After a rigorous Hell Week, pledges became actives and concluded initiation by serenading the women's dormitories. In triangle formation, old and new members held lighted candles and sang their "Marching Song" for coeds, who filled dormitory windows. During the year, members resided at the Blackfriar Co-op House and shared in college life as well as in concentrated efforts for writing a script, publicizing, raising money, painting backdrops, and rehearsing their show, "R.F." Spring brought a revelation of "Remember Forever" to Capen Auditorium. As a hush settled over the audience, they witnessed not only a hilarious comedy, interspersed with serious drama, but a century-old tradition of the fraternity bonded together by a devotion to music and dramatic arts—the Blackfriars.

Communication: A Developed Skill

Debating with Virginia Smith, his colleague, Dennis Gouran makes a logical point for compulsory health insurance.

On Tuesday nights, a room on third floor in the University Union was reserved for Forensics Union, a group newly-organized in 1960-61. The activity in the room ranged from holding practice debates to discussing original orations. But whatever the branch of forensics—oratory, extempore speaking, debate, or discussion—all public speakers were intent on becoming skilled in the art of oral communication.

The debate team, after studying the pros and cons of socialized medicine, traveled to Northwestern, Bradley, and the state universities in Illinois. In the spring, trips east took them to West Point and Harvard University. At Wayne State University in Michigan, a departure from the customary system of judging allowed the teams to be given two decisions—that of the audience and that of the judge. Successes were frequent; but of greater value was the critical thinking and the effective rhetorical style that evolved.

TOWER STUDIOS

Special events, guest speakers, sports scores, coming weekend activities—campus news reached students, faculty members, and residents of Bloomington-Normal. Broadcast from Tower Studios, programs informative, interesting, and entertaining linked the University with the community. Interviews with campus guests directed attention to University functions. Musical, social, and political broadcasts provided an outlet for the expression of creativity. The news commentaries, presented each weekday over WJBC, Bloomington, were written by students. Gary Planck moderated the program; Martin Hunt, Jr., acted as technical engineer. Ralph Smith was the faculty adviser. From Cook Hall, the home of Tower Studios on the campus, to the Bloomington-Normal area, each program united the student and his community.

In his third year of reporting campus news, Gary Planck presents an informative program from Cook Hall.

The Mind's Creativity

Recording the year of college events takes more than a year's preparation. As early as the previous spring, business, layout, literary, and editorial staffs conferred to plan the 1961 Index. They knew their work would demand not only artistic design and creative writing, but also careful scrutiny of the ideas and people comprising the business world.

Sandy Green cuts engraving proofs for layout editor Arie Greenleaf to use in "building" a page.

in Design and Writing

To some, a yearbook is nothing more than the casual arrangement of pictures and copy, a compilation done in the students' spare time. In reality, however, it is a major production. With top quality engraving, printing, and cover companies interviewed, the Index staff chose its associates. Following this selection, the layout staff began its intense work on the "dummy." Pictures were arranged and rearranged in hopes of achieving the most artistic placement. Copy also was important in describing the year's activities, for, through discriminate writing, the literary staff presented the varied interpretations of University life. In adding the finishing touch, the editor and assistant editor were the final coordinators of the business, layout, and literary staffs.

These were the people, therefore, to whom the weekly meetings in the University Union became so significant. They experienced success, failure, joy, and tears; but always they worked in hopes of presenting a commendable annual to the student body.

From Reporting and Revising

On Wednesday as they picked up a copy, or two or three for friends and roommates, students and faculty often took the Videttes for granted. To the staff members, the finished product was not just eight pages of newsprint, but the culmination of a week's creative work—the fruit of countless hours spent writing and arranging copy into an attractive layout, which informatively and interestingly presented campus and community news. Obtaining the news was the first step; beginning reporters covered beats; the more experienced wrote features and reviews, combining clarity, exactness, and eloquence. Monday nights found the staff proofreading copy, writing headlines, and arranging pages. Thursday afternoons, they corrected errors and discussed ways to make the paper more interesting. Dispersed throughout the busy week, coffee breaks were frequent.

Constantly seeking the newest techniques of interviewing, writing, and layout, chosen members of the staff attended conferences in New York, Chicago, and Jacksonville, where they met newspaper men from many papers in the country. Shared with fellow workers, this information was applied in succeeding issues.

Vidette staff members anticipated placing their finished product outside the Cage, for it signified both a challenge met and a week of creativity begun.

SWEETHEART BALL

White lace, scarlet hearts, and danceable tones of Johnny Cain's band in the University Union Ballroom provided a backdrop for the staging of the Sweetheart Ball on February 11, 1961. Formal attire transformed students and guests into participating actors; and a jeweled crown, presented by first attendant Carole Berner, put Judy Romary in the Queen's role. Attendants Beverly Brush, Kathy Svob, and Barbara Shipman completed her court. Entertainment for actors and actresses was vocal, a duet by Sharon Marzucci and John Hire and a solo by John Porter capturing attention at intermission time. The finale brought this Valentine Ball to an end, guests leaving the deserted stage and anticipating future performances.

MADRIGAL SINGERS

From an old English custom emerged ISNU's Madrigals—fourteen singers selected from the University Choir. During Queen Elizabeth's time, Madrigals frequented Christmas celebrations; for five years, our own Madrigals have frequented holiday banquets in the ballroom of the University Union.

Heralded by a trumpet fanfare, a jester calls the people to the hall. Following him, the Madrigals march to the "Doxology." With cheer and good wishes they toast the Yuletide and sing the Wassail Song. In keeping with the tradition, a flaming, figgy pudding is served; after dinner a half-hour program of England's old carols completes the performance. Capacity crowds attended the eight banquets presented in 1960. As well as receiving plaudits on campus, the Madrigals traveled to Peoria on their annual tour with the University Choir, where audiences commended the unaccompanied sixteenth-century music.

Candlelight, music, and decorations in the Ballroom recall a time of ancient Christmas celebrations.

Music

Music is expression of the soul. From the lullaby of a mother singing to her young child to the rhythmic beauty and solemnity of a choir singing Negro spirituals, music speaks a language of its own. A variety of music groups at Illinois State Normal University provides for the aptitudes of anyone on campus, from any department. Students who cultivated talents in high school extracurricular activities find opportunities to continue their interest. Many, intent on developing skill, major in music. To them, the beauty and vitalness of the art becomes a medium, not only of self-expression, but of communication.

The study of a composer's background and the circumstances under which he wrote assist the student in music's interpretation. A concert of blended lyrics resulted from understanding and practice when white-jacketed men in the Glee Club combined with the two hundred voices in Women's Chorus to present in effectiveness each time it is heard, Handel's oratorio is a campus tradition during the Christmas season.

The instrumental as well as the vocal provides for musical expression. The Marching Band practiced long hours in preparation for football half-time shows. Precision formations and spirited music were displayed as the men's and women's bands met in the middle of the field. After the football season, Concert Band formed. On the downbeat, woodwinds, brass, and percussions combined in delicate shadings from overtures to show tunes. They gave a concert on campus, boarded University busses for a two-day tour, and provided accompaniment as June graduates marched from University High School to the amphitheatre.

The sound of strings was predominant as the University Symphony rendered classical and modern works. Emphasis on the classical indicated that music need not be novel to be significant.

A source of inspiration and pleasure to both the participant and the listener, music expresses a range of feelings which suit any mood. Whether an individual is gay or melancholy, whether his tastes lean to the instrumental or vocal, whether he is participating or listening, there is music to satisfy him.

Bells Ring on Capen Stage . . .

A bubbly Barbara Meyer brought Judy Holliday's stage role to life in Capen Auditorium when Lowell Masons presented "Bells Are Ringing." Rollicking lines, lilting scores, and sparkling characterizations turned eight weeks of rehearsals into success for the production, directed by senior music major Donna Merris. A love story begun over the telephone; a bookie who obviously had not studied Beethoven; and a dentist who composed songs to his air hose—all figured in the play's conflicts.

The same enthusiasm that attended the staging of their show accompanied the club's annual trip to the Illinois Music Educators' Association at the University of Illinois. Sponsoring a scholarship for a member was an additional way that these majors and minors furthered interest in music education.

Supplying romantic interest, John Winkler and Barbara Meyer musically proclaim that they love each other.

Shades of Gaiety

A variety of games in brilliantly-arrayed booths summoned the fun-loving at the Women's League Carnival. A clever display of legs, then faces, tested skill in matching them at the booth entered by the Freshman Advisory Board. Hamilton-Whitten Hall provided a jail where students arranged warrants for friends' arrests. Exhibiting initial-year creativity, the two freshman entries tied for first place. Third place went to the Intervarsity Christian Fellowship, whose artistic talents enabled carnival-goers to take home silhouettes of themselves. An atmosphere of gaiety was proof that hours of planning under efficient leadership terminated in a fun-filled night.

Exhibiting agricultural interests, women compete in the Carnival's milking contest.

To prepare for their own teaching, Orchesis women held high school workshops.

The circus—a source of endless pleasure to young and old. Surrounded by members of her court, Marti Laird, Janet Beardsley, Pat Miles, and Marie Chmielewski, Queen Sue Stock commanded the performance to begin. The whistle of Ringmaster Byron Roderick pierced the air; at once, performers burst into action. Children, delighted with the antics of oddly-proportioned clowns, shifted their expressions to those of wonder as a unicyclist performed high above his wheel.

ISNU took special pride in the Twenty-Fifth Annual Gamma Phi Circus, for, as those of previous years, it was performed entirely by student amateurs from any department of the University. Interest was the only requirement; the skilled and unskilled appeared in September at the first Sunday afternoon workout. On subsequent Sundays, tedious hours of practice transformed the struggling amateur to the status of a confident artist.

Performances were not limited to the three presented on campus. Along with stunning costumes, the troupe packed parallel bars, the revolving wheel, and swinging ladders, and traveled to Beardstown, Eureka, and Kewance. After the final performance, equipment stood idle in readiness for the personable talent that would utilize it the coming fall.

Influential Leadership

Chuck Dunn, president of the Senate, exemplifies that self-confidence is a prerequisite for leadership.

Composed of elected representatives from all departments and the graduate school, this governing body promoted unity through the reciprocal exchange of administrative and student opinion. Correlating the two, the Student Senate hoped to gain benefits for both. When a fire destroyed the belongings of seven coeds, the Senate sponsored a drive for aid that helped to replace the women's possessions. When the Universities Bond Issue needed support, the Senate participated in a state-wide marathon. To encourage favorable voting, two hundred students carried the torch along with other collegiate runners from the state universities of Illinois. On the campus, speakers discussed the issue at school rallies. Passing of the bill brought subsequent aid, not only to Illinois State Normal University, but to other universities within the state. Thus the Student Senate, affording far-reaching benefits, experienced an influential year.

A pleasant manner, yet seriousness of responsibility, describes Judy Romary, president of University Union Board.

UNIVERSITY UNION BOARD

Functions Diversified

For students, faculty, and community, the University Union denotes the cultural and the social—its functions coordinated by the University Union Board. Helping turn plans into realities, students exhibited interest in voluntary committee work. A Roman banquet honored them; those who had accumulated hours and maintained an all-school grade average were eligible to become members.

The board sponsored for the first time the Sweetheart Ball and continued to organize such events as the Friday Jazz Ltd. sessions, ski trips, and the Christmas Ball and the tree-lighting ceremony. Frequently, the Union Ballroom was transformed from a dance floor to an efficient place of business, as members of the community used it for banquets and lectures. Proudly hosting the annual conference of Region Six of the Association of College Unions, the board met with students from Illinois, Indiana, and Wisconsin. Accumulated ideas defined functions diversified.

Former Scouts, men of Alpha Phi Omega attempted to refute the idea that instructions of youth tend to be learned, then carelessly forgotten. Sponsors of the Red Cross Blood Program and the Vicks CARE Crusade on campus, and distributors of calendar desk blotters, they functioned as a service fraternity.

But Cloverleaf Collegiates extended interest beyond cooking, sewing, and hand-crafts. Choosing "Civil Defense" as a theme, they learned of its significance in the high school.

ELEMENTARY CLUB

A UNESCO film, "Assignment Children," a panel of first-year teachers, and a trip to the ACEI Conference at Southern Illinois University supplemented the experience elementary majors gained at Victory Hall. The boys liked them—the counselors, companions, and helpers who came on Wednesdays.

Men in industrial arts were participants in regional and state exhibits, but they combined their academic work with service to the University. It was the Industrial Arts Club that again provided the answer to the campus communications problem: 4500 addresses and telephone numbers in a student directory.

MEN'S PE CLUB

"Solid muscle from the neck up" is a colorful, but inept description if linked with this men's club. NAACP, united for strength and organized for work, co-sponsored this effort to promote social harmony, an effort extended to investigating restaurant policies toward the serving of minority groups.

SCIENCE CLUB

Subjects beyond classroom study provided program topics to heighten interest in science. Upperclassmen selected from eight fields viewed a demonstration of electronic ovens. From lectures they learned of the importance of science knowledge in the elementary school and of developments in hybrid corn research.

A hearing aid, a Braille writer, a wheelchair, or a brace indicate challenges for those in Fairchild Hall who work with the young. Monthly programs of the Special Education Club, a Christmas toy workshop, and Y-nights at the YMCA helped equip students to meet problems inherent in teaching the exceptional.

STUDENT NEA

The value of professionalism in the make-up of future teachers was presented to the Student National Education Association. Separate programs concerned with the classroom situation, student teaching, and PTA activities were skillfully coordinated to culminate in a Gestalt-like view of the "whole" teacher.

Discussions between adviser Dean Hulet and president Jerry Schieber result in efficient U Club guidance.

Just as the spirit of unity gave light to the Homecoming bonfire, so the spirit of unity joined all men in the University Club. The organization sponsored a variety of entertainment ranging from the smooth strains of Ralph Marterie's orchestra to the progressive jazz of Duke Ellington. Along with co-sponsoring Big Fours, the club presented other activities for the improvement of social events on campus. The rollicking merriment and competitive spirit of the Stunt Show and the Mr. Mig election contrasted with an inspiring service on Mother's Day. Against the background of majestic Christmas trees and the soft harmony of choral voices, U Club presented its Christmas service. United to serve both the University and the individual, members developed leadership and responsibility as they approached the teaching profession.

WOMEN'S LEAGUE

With Goals in Mind . . .

In the sometimes seemingly slow—at other times unbelievably fast—transition from student to teacher, Women's League played a vital role. New members, observing direction within the group, learned to be leaders while yet followers. Organizing the campus Little Sister movement was only one project to which women leaguers devoted time and energy. They assisted, also, in planning two formal dances and the Spring Carnival. Joined by the men of University Club, they co-sponsored the Big 4 dances and Dad's and Mother's Days. Friendships with on and off campus women culminated in the Annual Regional Convention of Women's Leagues. Thus, a wide scope of acquaintances and information prepared these women for a teacher's important role, the role of a leader. With goals in mind, they assumed this stature.

YOUNG DEMOCRATS

With their help the symbolic donkey triumphed. Young Democrats brought to ISNU speakers Otto Kerner, elected Governor of Illinois; Joseph Lohman, Cook County Sheriff; Victor Reuther, and Mrs. Joseph Kennedy. In election year 1960 they encouraged a continued student interest in political issues.

Similarly, a weekend Chicago trip to the State Federation of College Young Republican Clubs yielded ideas governmental, extending political knowledge beyond the superficial.

RELIGIOUS ORGANIZATIONS

Mature Thought Evolves . . .

"When I was a child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child: but when I became a man, I put away childish things": First Corinthians 13 has words of significance for the college student. For the college religion transcends the days of childhood when beliefs were simple and unquestioned, when religion meant only calm acceptance. Questioning, challenge, and exploration, instead, transform assumptions into cogent realities.

Recognizing the value of religious conviction, ISNU students are church-going students. Many sing in choirs, teach Sunday School, or lead youth groups. And some discover for the first time the importance of Christian service, awakening to the fulfillment that comes from serving Him, the best of teachers.

Not only is the academic stressed. Religious organizations of the University and church-sponsored student foundations off campus guide the quest for knowledge. It is the church and the university together that strengthen the student. Non-credit courses in religion, taught by local ministers, supplement his intellectual growth. The academic and the spiritual, then, are not isolated entities.

From calm acceptance to mature thought, the university student formulates principles to guide his functioning as a teacher and his usefulness as a citizen.

Christian community living is the discussion topic, as Sue Taylor and Jim and Marty Rees comment on the book Life Together.

Through Study

The development of mature thought is aided by off-campus religious organizations. Some of the most important decisions in his life are made by the college student. Having chosen his vocation, he decides whether to enter the profession immediately or to continue his education in graduate school. He may select his life partner. Inevitably, he devises a value system which will pattern his life in the years to come. Through the help of the campus ministry and the association with other students who share his doubts and questions, he views religion as relevant to the teaching-learning process and to the truth-seeking which is the task of the campus community.

A varied selection of books commands Joanne Costabile's attention at the library of the Newman Club Center.

APOSTOLIC CHRISTIAN BIBLE CLASS

Second of its kind on the campus of a university, Apostolic Christian Bible Class completed its first year as a recognized student organization. During this initial year, Bible study, discussions, guest ministers, thought-filled silences, and voices blended in song extolled the religious teachings of Christ.

CANTERBURY CLUB

Episcopalian students from ISNU and from neighboring Illinois Wesleyan University met Sunday evenings in Wesleyan's Memorial Center. To strengthen the Church's work on campus, a Lay Reader's license was granted one member of Canterbury Club, enabling him to conduct morning prayer in the Union.

Not alike in what they think, Unitarian-Universalist students attempted to reach mature judgments. Channing-Murray Foundation extended a gamut from the place of religion in the university to the impact of disarmament, strengthening ideas through doubt and challenge, elements in critical thinking.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE

EUB FELLOWSHIP

Time to relax from their studies and to join with students of similar faith was offered members of the Evangelical United Brethren Fellowship. On Sunday evenings they met for cost suppers followed by informal discussions, which aided self-expression and enriched ideas conceived within the realm of religion.

IVCF

"To know Him and to make Him known" was their pledge. With Bible study, prayer, and hymn-singing, Intersarsity Christian Fellowship enriched the spiritual lives of students from all denominations. Too, they visited the Home Sweet Home Mission in Bloomington, their goal Christian deeds.

JEWISH STUDENTS

A religious group newly conceived for students of the Jewish faith realized its founding idea, providing a place where Jewish students might meet to discuss problems religious and social. Success of the organization was such that membership grew until it had encompassed nearly all the Jewish students of ISNU.

LUTHERAN CLUB

Cool Heads on Cold Afternoons . . .

Plagued by injuries to key players throughout the season, the ISNU footballers found their work cut out for them as they came through the 1960 campaign, compiling an unimpressive 2-6-1 over-all mark and a 1-4-1 Interstate Intercollegiate Athletic Conference record. In the early weeks of the season the Birdies lost co-captain Mike Monken, who, injured in the third game, found it necessary to sit out the remainder of the schedule. Other veterans lost by injury were center Veryl Bernhardt and halfback Ron Ross. The injuries were all the more disheartening when one learned that Monken was ranked among the top pass receivers in the nation prior to his impairment.

The gridders opened the season on a cherry note as they posted a 7-3 victory over Ball State College at McCormick Field. A visit to Decatur one week later, however, ended unhappily as the Big Blue of Millikin raced past our Redbirds by a 7-0 margin.

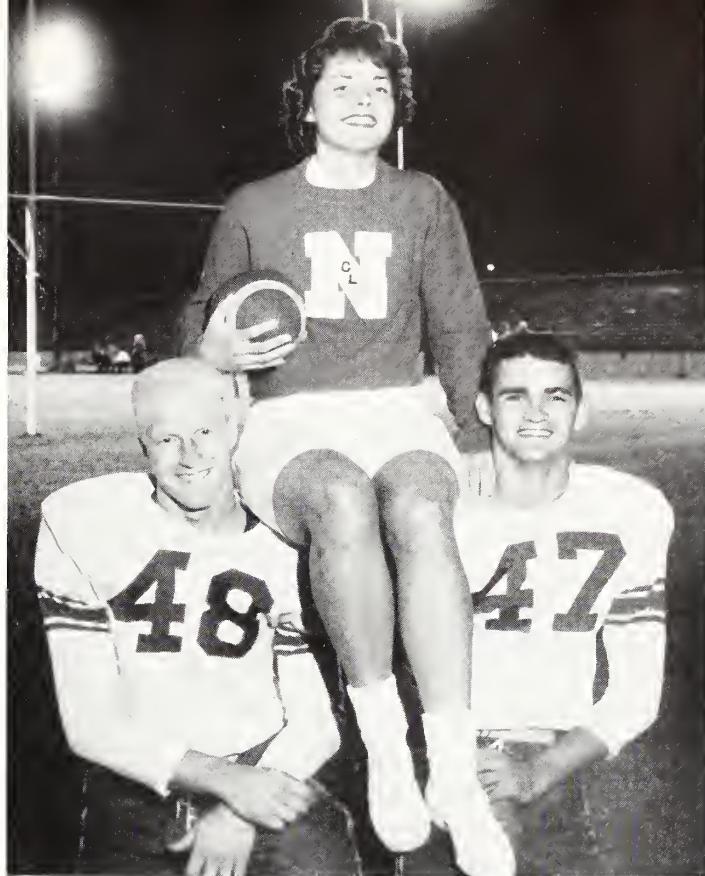

A calm fall evening at McCormick Field was the setting for ISNU's first IAC test as the Birdies hosted Eastern Michigan's Hurons under the new stadium lights. Playing before a capacity crowd, Illinois State came roaring back from a halftime deficit to gain a 14-14 tie. Successful in this venture, the first night football game on the University's gridiron set a precedent. The Birdies will, in the future, play all of their September and October games under the arcs, except for the Homecoming contest.

Following this standoff, the gridders lost four consecutive IIAC games including a 20-0 Homecoming decision to the Huskies of Northern Illinois University. But the Redbirds bounced back to capture their final conference tilt as they blasted Eastern Illinois University 26-6 on the Panthers' home field. The season ended with a heartbreaking loss to Illinois Wesleyan University—the first ISNU loss to a Wesleyan eleven in more than a decade.

Co-captain "Whitey" Ruzycki, the big stalwart end of the Redbirds, copped two post season honors. Elected as the team's most valuable player by his mates, he also was voted a first squad position on the IIAC all-star team by a poll of the conference coaches. Dave Murphy and Dave Babcock both received honorable mention in the conference selections.

Sophomore Bill Vance topped the Redbirds in scoring with three touchdowns and boasted a 4.3 yard-per-game rushing average. Field general Keith Rieger led the squad in total offense with an 80 yard-per-game offensive average. On the opposite side of the ledger, one would have to pick Leonard "Whitey" Ruzycki as the bulwark of the ISNU defensive line.

Tackle Dave Babcock and quarterback Keith Rieger were elected co-captains for the 1961 varsity season.

JUNIOR VARSITY

Through the Season

Illinois State's junior varsity footballers had a more successful campaign than did their big brothers as the Jayvees compiled a 3-3 record. Included in the Junior Birds' victories were wins over Eastern Illinois University, Western Illinois University, and Joliet Junior College.

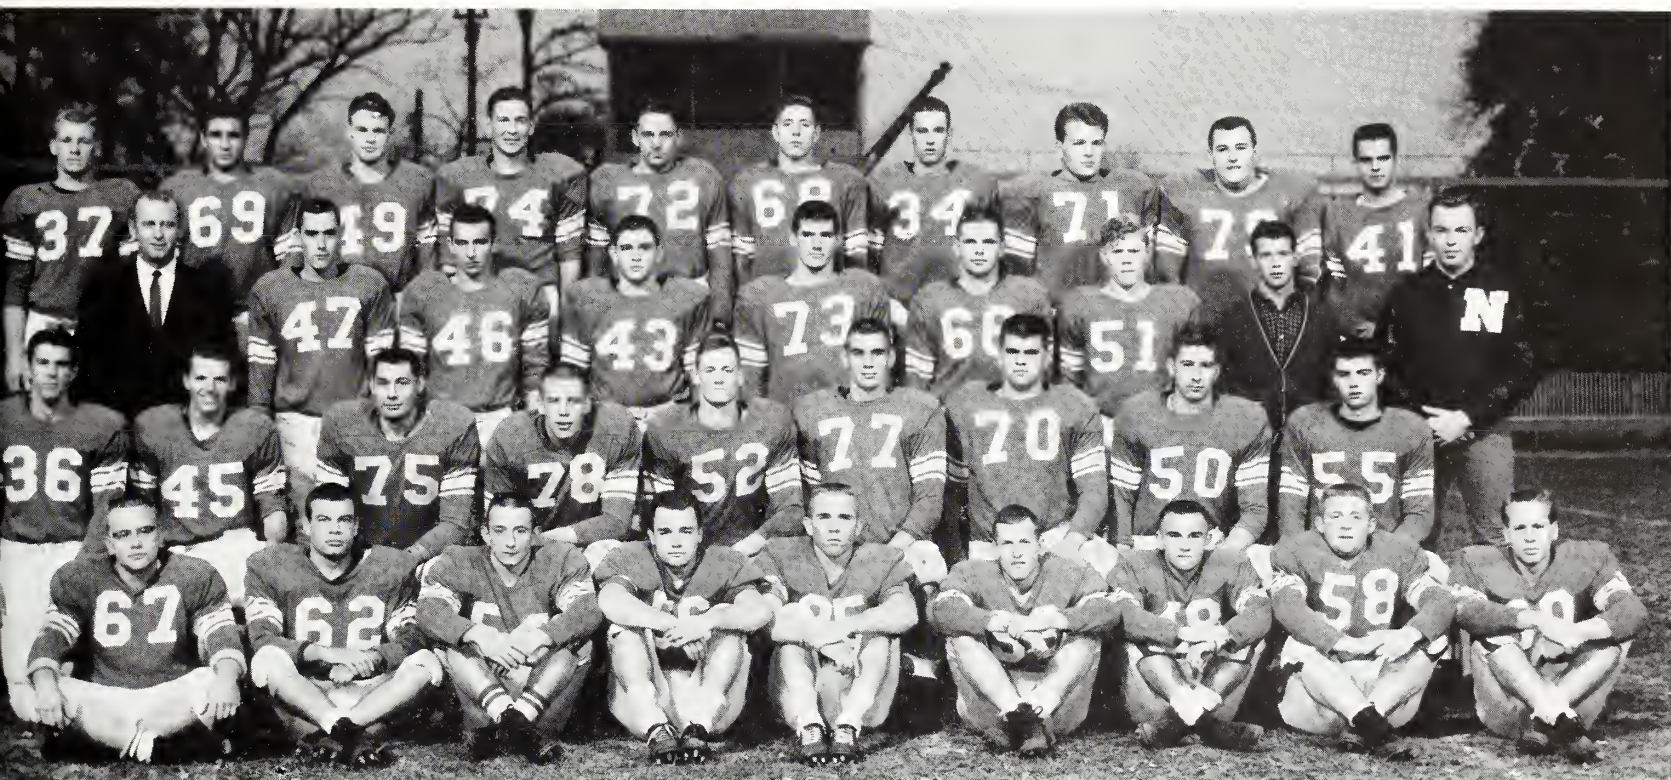

Some of the most outstanding of future varsity candidates were sophomore John Balsis, a halfback who displayed both ability and determination to move the ball downfield; freshman Don Baumgartner, a quarterback who showed promise of a bright future; and sophomore Dick Swanson, a backfield man adept in the skills of punting and place kicking.

With the help of these men and other junior varsity gridders, the ISNU footballers sized into a balanced squad for the 1961 schedule.

N CLUB

Parallels in Achievement

Men of N Club joined university functions with the same zeal that accompanied their athletic participation. In both sports and activities, this zeal earned group recognition. The men showed ISNU football movies in the University Union, maintained concessions at games, and aided the McLean County Basketball Tournament. Providing financial assistance to students, they awarded scholarships to incoming freshmen and other men in the field of athletics. Socially-minded, too, N Club sponsored the Homecoming Queen election, welcomed visiting fathers on Dad's Day, and sponsored the annual Goodwill Dance between Illinois Wesleyan University and Illinois State Normal University. Their prowess on the playing fields indicated athletic ability; success of activities indicated organization and cooperation in the non-sport scene.

A witty remark draws hearty laughter from officers Chuck Sandine, Tom Tucker, and Keith Rieger.

Perseverance for Miles Ahead

Mike Mittelstaedt forges ahead in the IIAC meet at Kappa. He finished seventh in the 47-man field.

Illinois State's youthful cross country squad ran up a 1-3 record in dual meet competition during the past year. In addition to their double team meets the Birdie harriers competed in four multi-team clashes with their fifth place finish in the Quincy Invitational topping the list. Freshman Mike Mittelstaedt was by far the most consistent Redbird performer. Mittelstaedt came home eleventh in a fifty-one man field in the 33rd running of the Illinois Intercollegiate Cross Country Association meet (IICAA), and seventh in the IIAC meet hosted by ISNU at Kappa.

Senior and captain, Rod Vawter completed four years of running with a respectable eighteenth place finish in the conference match. It was mainly the running of Vawter and Mittelstaedt that enabled the Birdies to finish sixth in the IIAC tussle.

ISNU's Don LaFond helped the Birdie cause as he posted a victory enabling the Redbirds to take an easy 26-0 dual win from the University of Missouri.

Matmen Rough with Rivals

Illinois State's wrestling squad coupled a 5-3-1 dual meet record with a fourth place finish in the IIAC meet to end a semi-fruitful winter campaign. One of the grapplers' losses was a 19-17 setback at the hands of Northern Illinois University. High spots in the season were ISNU's 26-0 and 23-3 victories over the University of Missouri and Wabash College, respectively.

In the ISNU camp were many stellar occupants:

Reggie Weaver, the Birdies' lightning-fast 147-pounder; sophomore Bob Keller, who wrestled in the 137-pound class and received the Hudleson Award for the most pins by an ISNU grappler; Bob Spicer, an aggressive 167-pounder who nearly always added points to the Redbirds' team total; and Don LaFond, a 191-pound senior who captured many a victory for the Redbirds.

Weaver and Dave Sheridan, ISNU's diminutive 115-pounder, both received bids to the NAIA meet.

BASKETBALL

The Verdict Is Ours . . . 19 Times

The Redbird hoopsters added luster to the ISNU sports picture with the successful defense of their Ottawa (Kansas) Holiday Basketball Tournament championship and a strong second place finish in the rugged IIAC. An overtime 83-80 victory over Pittsburg State College of Kansas gave the visitors from Illinois their second tourney title in two years. Surprising many a prognosticator, the hoop-men side-tracked perennial powerhouse Western Illinois University and also Eastern and Northern Illinois Universities on their climb to the runner-up position behind champion Southern Illinois University, recognized nationally as one of the strongest of small college teams.

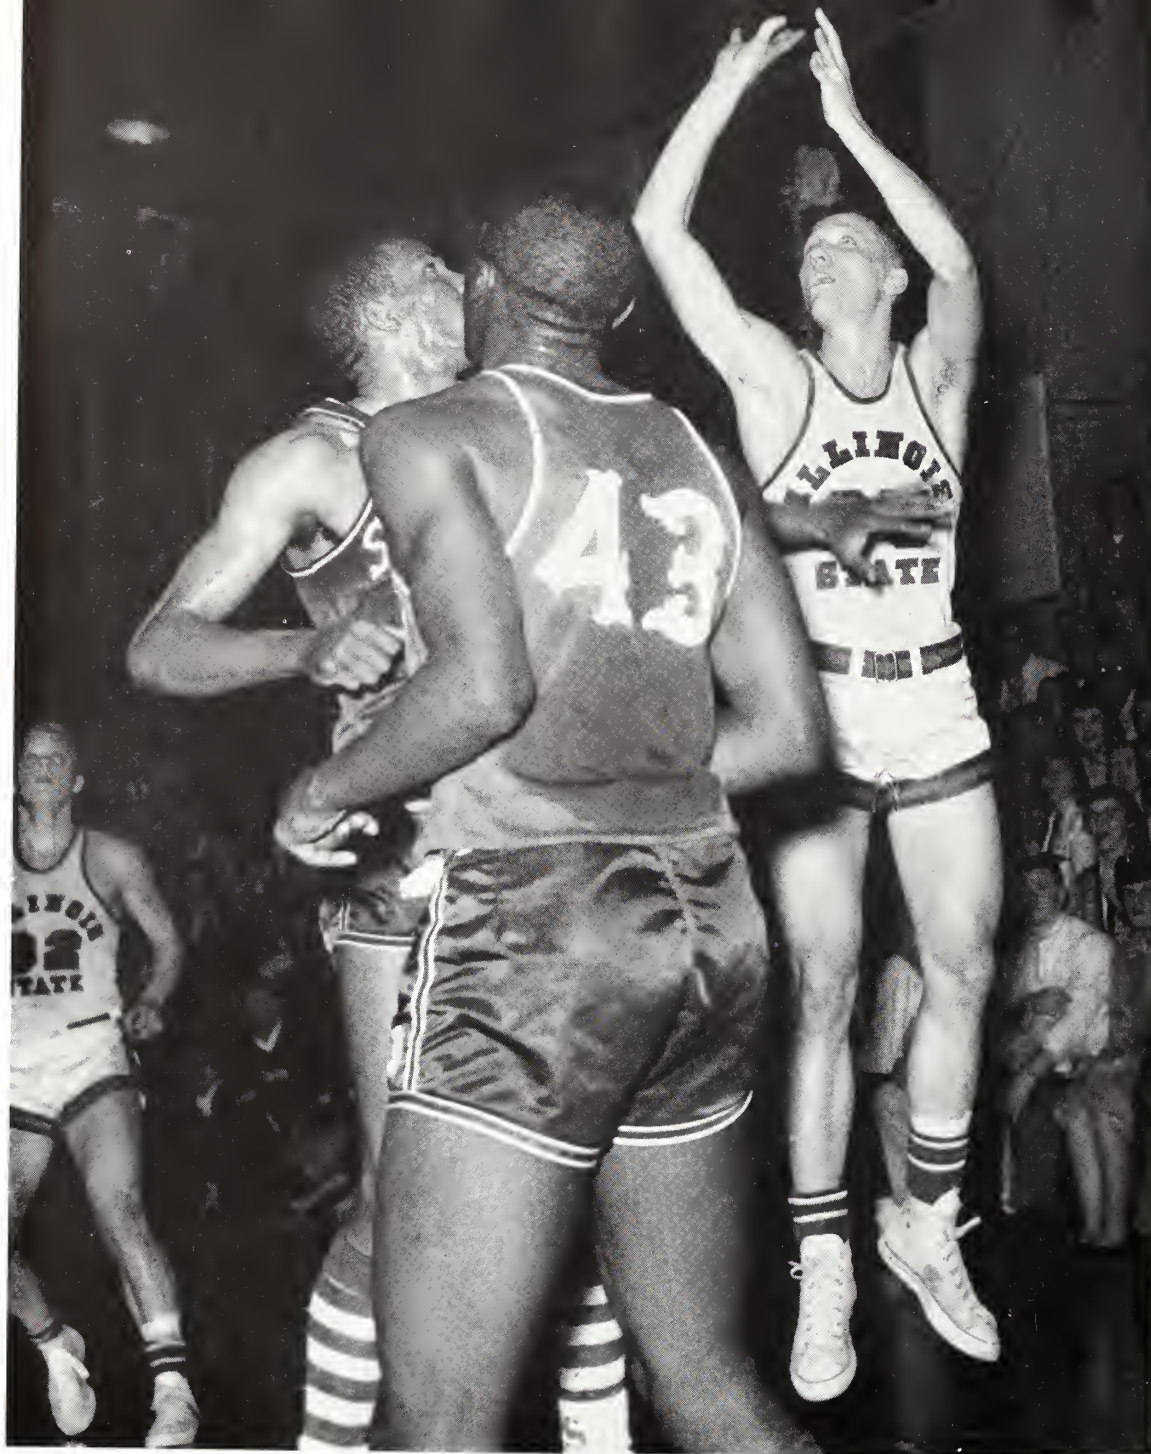

ISNU's hardwood quint showed a fighting determination throughout the season. A good example of their aggressive floor tactics was the final game with SIU. Southern Illinois University had walloped the Birdies by a 29-point margin early in the season; however, when the two met again, the Salukis realized they had a battle on their hands. The Birdies kept pace all the way before faltering in the final seconds and dropping a 92-87 decision. Too, it was quite an evening back in January when sophomore starter Jim Ringel sank two last-second free throws to pull the Birdies from the edge of defeat to a thrilling 74-73 victory over Northern Illinois' Huskies.

Coach Collie's five hit the century mark four times during the roundball season with their high score, 109 points, coming against the University of Dubuque in McCormick Gymnasium. Illinois State had little trouble with its cross-town rival, Illinois Wesleyan University, as the Redbirds pinned 67-63 and 74-63 losses on the Titans. These victories were the sixth and seventh in succession for ISNU over a Wesleyan quint.

By virtue of their second place finish in the IIAC, the Redbirds were elected to represent the conference in the NAIA District 20 playoffs in McCormick Gymnasium. However, ISNU suffered a first round setback at the hands of Lewis College—a team the Birdies had beaten by 29 points earlier in the season—to close the schedule with a 19-7 overall mark and an 8-4 conference mark.

Shaw also finished third among all-time ISNU scoring leaders, behind Fred Marberry and Bill Sarver, who hold the first and second positions, respectively. John Swart, the other co-captain, had an equally fine year as he too earned a starting berth on the IIAC all-star team. Swart topped the team in points scored with a 17.6 per-game average, in rebounds with 8.8 rebounds per game, and in individual field goal percentages with a .530 mark. Other standout performers for the Redbirds were Dale Haywood, whose offensive play was second only to his great defensive play; and Frank Schlosser, a 6'5" sophomore whose late season improvement assured the Redbirds of a big man under the boards for the next two years.

As a team, ISNU ranked high in IIAC District 20 statistics for the 1960-61 season. The Birdies were first in free throw percentages with a .743 mark, second in team defense with 75.8 and in field goals with .448, and fourth in team offense with an 82.3 grade.

In the Swim . . .

Early morning swims, combined with daily afternoon practice sessions were part of the rigid conditioning program Coach Harris used to bring out the best in his men. And bring out the best he did.

Although as a team the aqua-Birds compiled a respectable 5-4 dual meet record and a fifth place finish in the IIAC meet at Central Michigan University, it was in the performances of two individuals, co-captain Jerry Schieber and sophomore George Vrhel, that made the Birdie fans sit up and take notice.

In late March after the completion of the season schedule, ISNU entered Schieber and Vrhel as a two-man team to represent the Birdies against full teams in the NAIA meet in Detroit, Michigan. Both men performed beyond expectations: Vrhel set NAIA records in both the 100- and 200-yard backstroke, and Schieber placed second in the 100-yard breaststroke and third in the 200-yard breaststroke. Together the two captured enough points for ISNU to finish a respectable sixth in the final team standings.

George Vrhel swims towards victory in the Birdies' final home meet.

GYMNASTICS

Coordination Leads to . . .

Gymnastics, one of the oldest and most popular of European sports, is strengthening its toehold on the American college scene as more and more schools add this sport to their varsity programs. Four years ago Illinois State Normal University added the field of gymnastics to its own varsity schedule.

Although the road to success has been continually rocky, gymnastic events gain more and more favor with ISNU sports fans. The crowds are larger and the campus interest is higher each year.

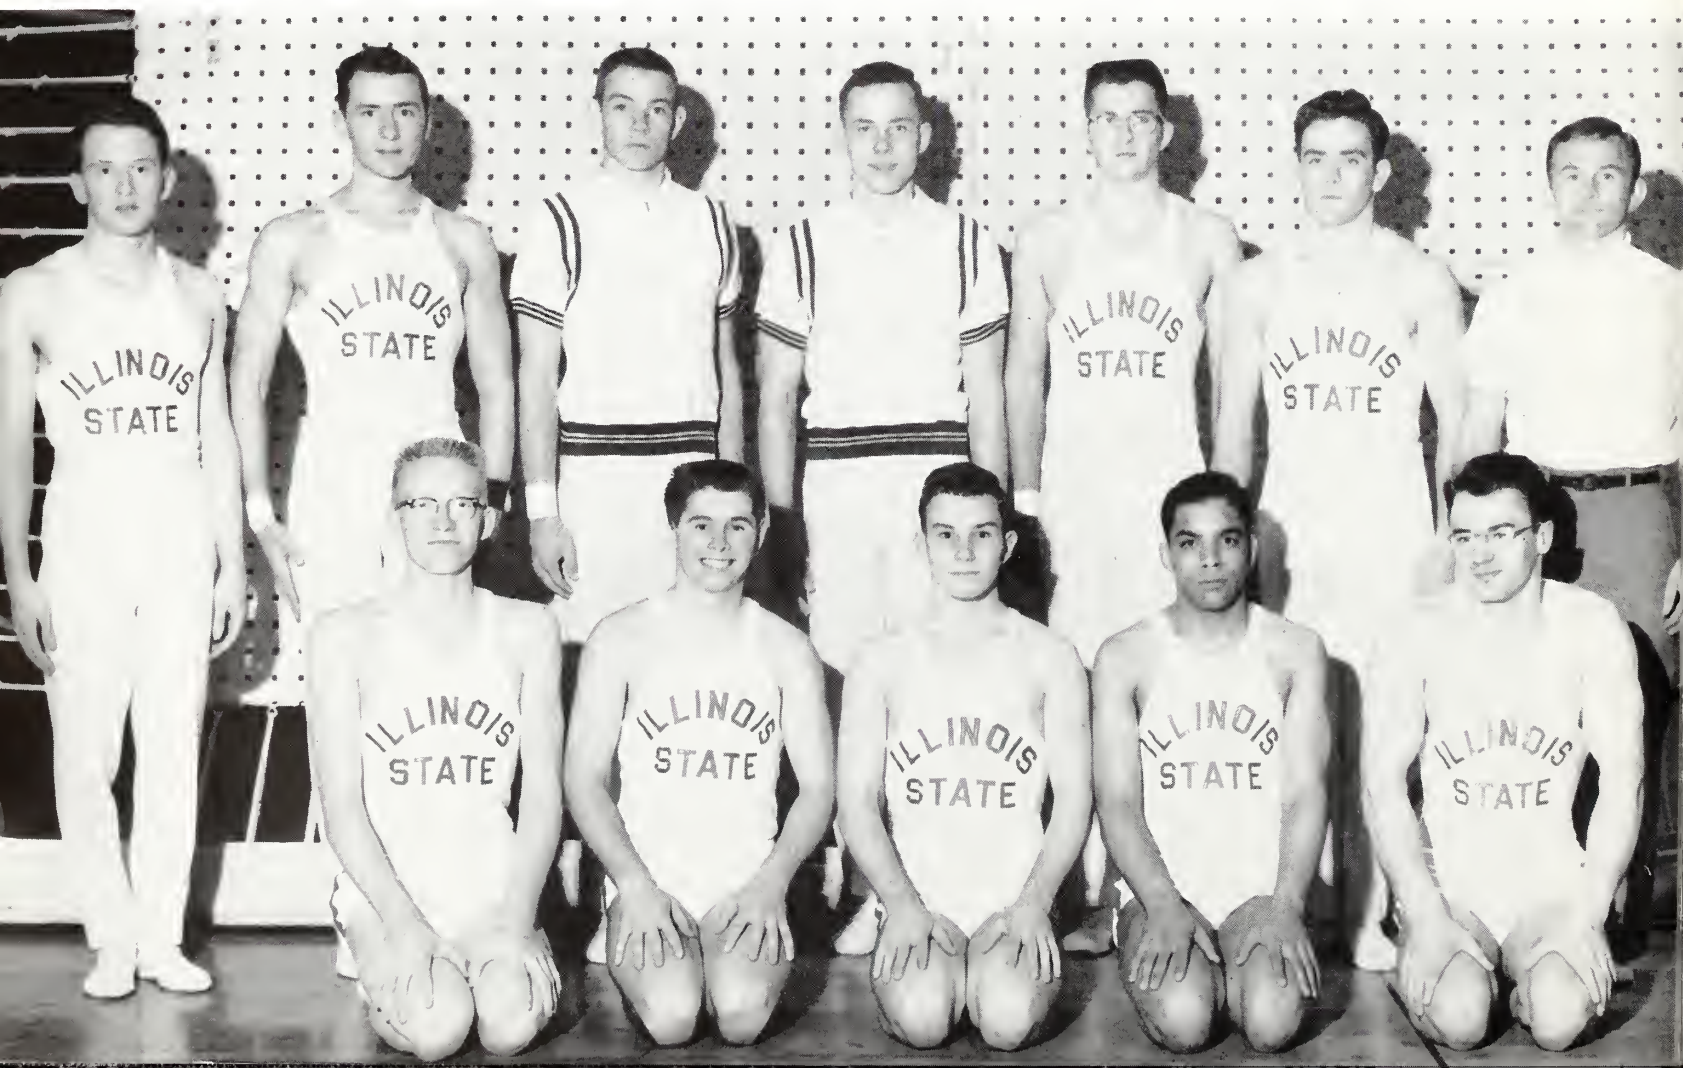

During the 1960-61 competitive schedule the Red-bird gymnasts finished second in all seven of their dual encounters and completed the season with a sixth place finish in the IIAC meet. Southern Illinois University captured the title with 206½ team points. ISNU's closest match was a narrow 57-54 loss to Central Michigan University at Mount Pleasant during the regular season.

Some of the outstanding performers for Coach Truex's squad were sophomore John Baltes, who was a Birdie standout in free exercise, tumbling, and trampoline events; Murray "Skip" Rounds, one of the team co-captains whose specialty was the parallel bars; and co-captain Dick Walker, who performed on the still rings and on the horizontal bars.

Gymnastics, emerging as an indoor winter sport, has found its place on the University campus. Through discipline of body, men develop skills.

MEN'S INTRAMURALS

Encircling Interests

Most men either follow the football scores, compile basketball averages, or anticipate the first spring day on the golf green. This year's intramural program, designed by Illinois State Normal University's Health and Physical Education Department, continued to accommodate the sportsminded. Since there are no age, skill, or scholastic requirements, any man not in varsity sports could participate in the activities, held on week ends or after classes. A variety of sports provided competition for all, regardless of interests. For those who favored indoor sports, there was basketball, volleyball, wrestling, or bowling. For the outdoor enthusiasts, baseball, tennis, and twelve- and sixteen-inch softball were offered. Women joined the men's intramural program on Fridays for co-ed swim night. Nearly all activities ended with tournaments; the displayed enthusiasm at these tournaments rivaled that of varsity competition. Met with such zealous interest, the recreational program became an outlet of expression for the sportsminded.

Utilizing the weekend swimming privileges of Metcalf pool, ISNU swimmers present an impromptu water formation.

WRA

Foundation for Character

Camping and skating, swim parties and play nights—all were a part of the Women's Recreation Association program. For those desiring competition, WRA provided intramural and intercollegiate extramural activities. Special sports days for volleyball, basketball, hockey, and softball added to the variety of the program. The display of sportsmanship and teamwork that characterized the women's participation transferred to everyday life, infusing into personal character such traits as responsibility, leadership, and a sense of fair play. Approximately sixty-five per cent of the ISNU women took part in activities geared to individual tastes, which ranged from averaging a bowling score to cooking over a camp fire.

Exhibiting excellent coordination, Normal tournament players execute maneuvers in the pass, set-up and spike steps of volleyball.

WOMEN'S EXTRAMURALS

The Skilled Participate

That interest in athletics is not confined to men at ISNU was evidenced by the number of women who attended Women's Recreation Association play nights and the number who participated in the extramural program, under the direction of WRA. Participants, chosen on the basis of skill and knowledge of sports strategy, represented many departments in the University besides physical education.

First, the women formed teams in hockey, basketball, volleyball, badminton, tennis, golf, and softball; the teams then traveled to other state universities to compete at informal tournaments. At the Sectional Volleyball Tournament on the Western Illinois University campus, ISNU compiled an impressive record, scoring seven wins against one loss. More important than winning, the teams developed agility as they met with other skilled players. The value of competition heightened, since no trophies were awarded. Rather than material rewards, the extramural program placed emphasis on providing skilled competition for women, developing intercollegiate cooperation, maintaining health, and promoting sportsmanship and character.

TRACK

Racing Time . . .

An air of tension prevails at the track meet: each man attempts to better his or another's time performance by accomplishing the same feat in a shorter period or attempts to heave the javelin or put the shot a distance farther than another has done. Competing in one of the oldest of man's physical endeavors, the Illinois State track team put in long hours of training to be in the best possible shape for the afternoons of competition.

Early in the season Ron Schieber set a new ISNU broad jump record of 23 feet, 4¼ inches in the Iowa State Teachers College Relays. Schieber was one of the Redbirds' most consistent performers in the 440, the broad jump, and the mile relay.

"Whitey" Ruzycki, whose javelin toss was good enough for third in the IIAC meet, won the State College Track Meet with a toss of 200 feet, 9 inches. Dick McCallister, Illinois State's ace javelin thrower, took the Redbirds' only first in the conference meet as he captured the javelin title with a toss of 200 feet, 6½ inches. Tom Tucker performed ably in the discus and the shot-put events.

Bill Herman and Dick McCallister were assets to Coach Cogdal's cinder squad during the last four years. McCallister garnered the javelin title in the 1960 IIAC meet. Herman, who captained the '60 squad, sat out the season because of a knee injury.

One of ISNU's best distance runners, Gary Fox, won both the mile and the two mile events in the Chanute Meet.

A high point of the 1960 track and field season came when Illinois State Normal University won its own ISNU Triangular, scoring 112½ points to 31 for Eureka College and 18½ for rival Illinois Wesleyan.

Don Korte, a freshman member of the cinderman squad, captured fifth in the 100-yard dash and fourth in the 220-yard dash at the IIAC meet, held at Northern Illinois University's Glidden Field. Mike Peterson, another freshman member of the squad, placed second in the conference high jump event. The Redbirds finished fifth in this Interstate Intercollegiate Athletic Conference meet, Central Michigan University holding the top position.

Bill Herman was captain of the 1960 track team—a team that found much of its strength in the performances of its freshman squad members.

TENNIS

Strong Arms Drive Racquets

Long afternoons of practicing under the hot sun paid dividends for Coach Eugene Hill and his netmen as they compiled a dual meet record of seven wins against four losses. The Birdies were thwarted by three rainouts, however, in their efforts to add more victories to their slate.

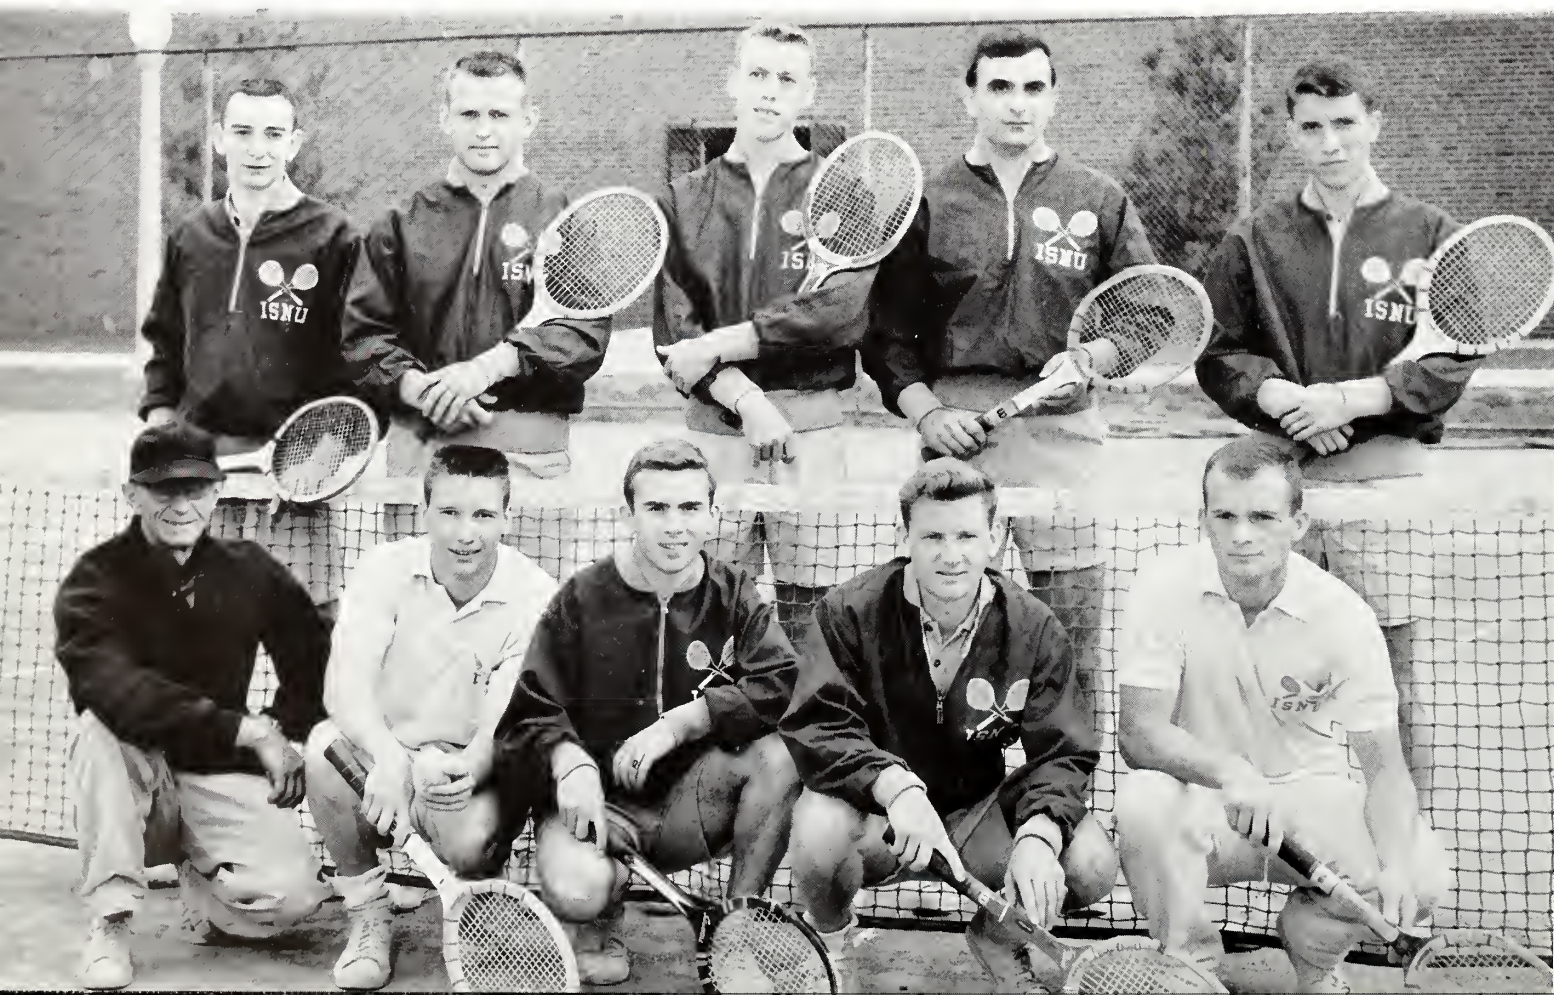

Two of the most satisfying triumphs for the 1960 tennis team were victories over Bradley University of Peoria, and Wheaton College.

The racquet squad kept up their efforts in the IIAC meet, finishing a very respectable third in the seven-member conference. Southern Illinois University, which had defeated ISNU 7-2 earlier in the season, copped the conference championship. Joe Cushing and Mike Copp were co-captains of the Illinois State Normal University netmen.

Some of the standout performers for ISNU were John Hornacek, who combined fine pitching with timely hitting to pace the Birdies most of the season; John Swart, who got the baseballers from a number of tight spots with his relief pitching; and freshman Jim Ringel, who patrolled left field capably for the alert Redbird teammates.

Al Petty turned in a commendable job at center field as did freshman Chuck Shuckhart at the shortstop position, when called upon to fill in for the injured Norm Torry.

Included among the Birdies' losses were defeats at the hands of the University of Wisconsin (6-0 and 2-0) and Bradley University (1-0). Coach Harold Frye's hardball nine completed season play with a 6-7 won-lost IIAC Conference record.

Presenting a Year of Reflection

A university is many things—its faculty and curricula, its students and alumni, and all of its physical facilities from library books and laboratory equipment to playing fields. The pages of this Index will give you an excellent review of our University during the 1960-1961 school year. For those of you shown herein, this book will become more valuable each year as you look back on your years at Illinois State Normal University. These pages will not only recall the work and study, the growth and adjustment, but also the pleasant times, the helpful staff, and the friendships that are and will be of lasting value to you.

The Index staff is to be congratulated on bringing together so well this history of Illinois State Normal University in 1960-1961 so that it might be preserved for the future and so that we who were a part of this history might recall more vividly our part in it.

AGRICULTURE

Dr. Harvey S. Woods, Head

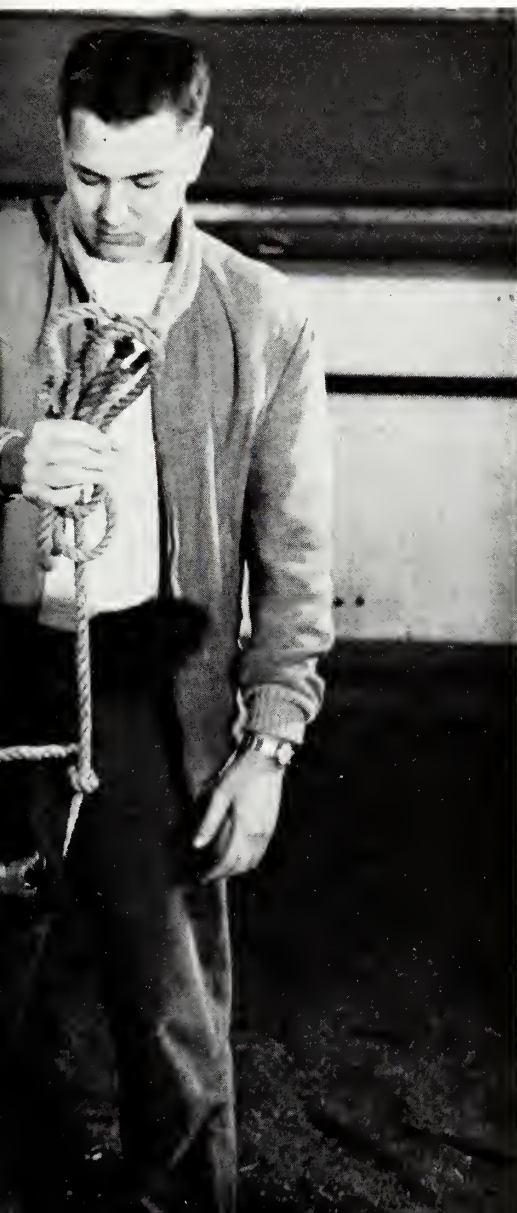

Nature . . . Man's Challenge

Challenged by his environment, man once found crude tools and a vastness of rich soil sufficient to fulfill his need for food. Today a growing population intensifies this challenge. Besides using his knowledge of the soil, the modern agriculturalist delves into the study of chemistry, biology, and economics. On approximately three hundred eighty acres of land west of the University, students of agriculture apply academic knowledge to the related fields of animal husbandry, agronomy, and conservation. To them, wheat ripening in the sun, dairy cattle grazing in the meadow, and corn rustling in the breeze are not accidents of nature; they are symbols: of progress, of ingenuity, of man conquering his environment.

The black, glossy coat of healthy angus evidences many hours of attention combined with agricultural research.

ART

Dr. F. Louis Hoover, Head

Aesthetic Images . . .

Geometric figures — lines, spheres, triangles — become expressions of ingenuity through the artist's imagination and creativeness. In preserving his thoughts and feelings for the ages, he creates the tangible state of a concept more profound than merely a pleasing combination of colors and shapes. Art does more than produce an aesthetic reaction. Through it, history may be traced. The first primitive scrib-blings on a stone wall, the turmoil of the Renaissance, or the abstract modern art—all reveal civilizations.

As vital as language, art must be studied to achieve a knowledge of fundamentals: the use of tools, color and value, proportion and perspective in oils and sculpture, and a familiarity with the works of the past. From years of study and practice of an original technique, the true artist mirrors the universal.

Warmth of color against cold brick in Centennial East evidences perseverance and skill in a senior's art exhibit.

BIOLOGICAL SCIENCE

Dr. R. Omar Rilett, Head

Laboratory of Life . . .

In nature man beholds the symmetry and precision of a perfect plan. The biology student explores the workings and structures of each unit in this huge design of nature. He realizes the importance of the most minute bacteria in relation to the intricate and detailed workings of the human being. He studies the vast setting from which living organisms derive their sustenance. In this setting, man can perceive beauty from the fragile flower to the awesome redwood tree. He sees life in the detailed perfection of every living creature. The classroom of the biology teacher is nature itself; his laboratory is the great outdoors where man need only look about him to be reminded of nature's benevolence and teachings.

Supplementing factual knowledge of the textbook, dissection of animals and fowl makes learning vivid and plausible.

NATURALISTS

Encouraged by an insatiable interest in nature and its order, the Naturalists sponsored field trips to interesting and scenic places. In the fall, they journeyed to Starved Rock State Park, pursuing knowledge and understanding. Their aim was to observe both the commonplace and the rare.

BUSINESS EDUCATION

Dr. Lewis R. Toll, Head

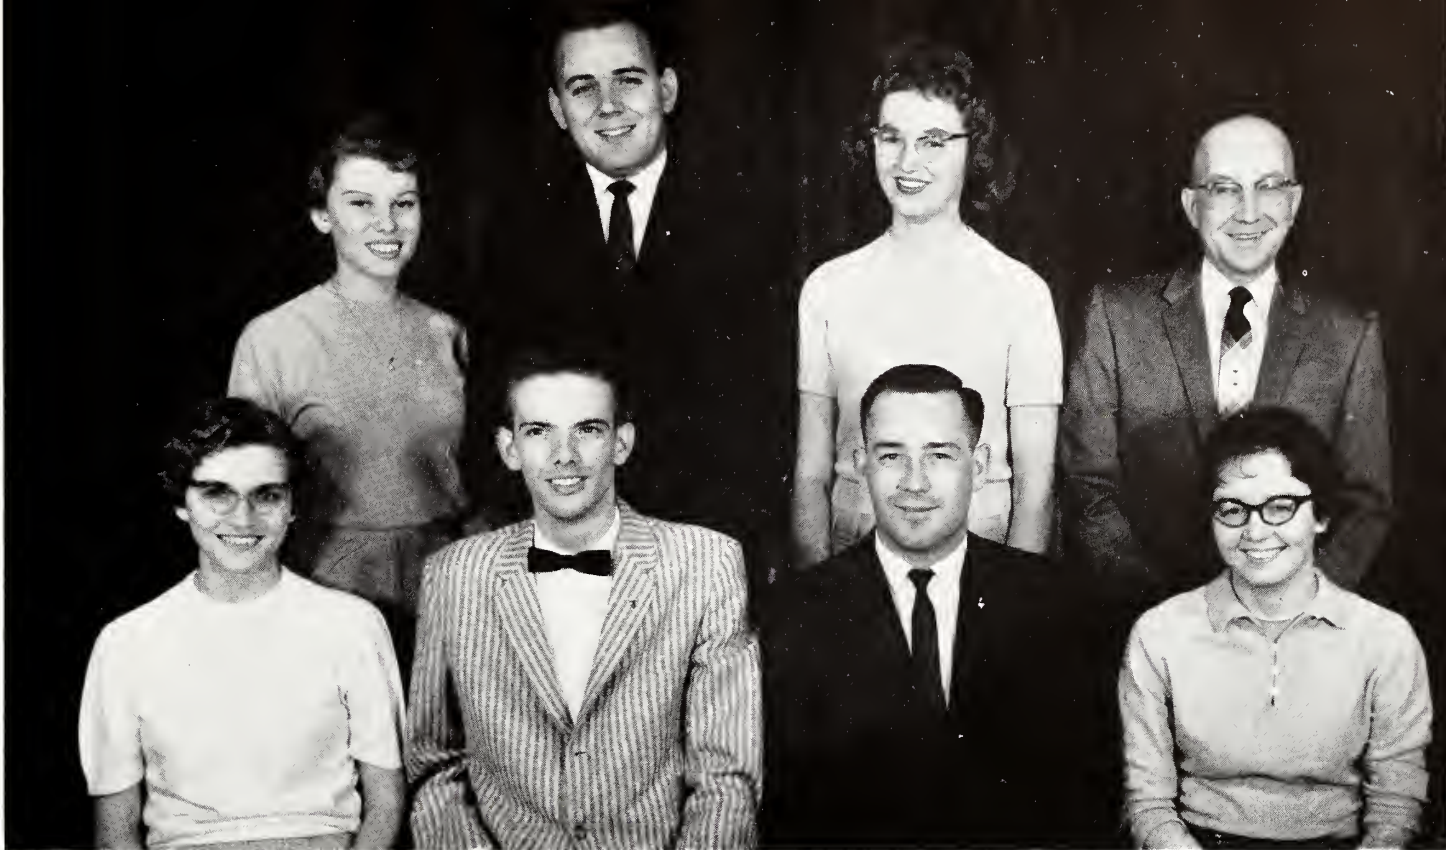

Foundations for Growth . . .

Fundamentals are the basis upon which man builds. Whether his goal is the mastery of a business machine or the solution to a problem in economics, he begins with the simple. The business major learns that adeptness at an electronic computer is not an inherent talent but a skill acquired only through practice. The accountant realizes that before he can handle the finances of a corporation he must first be able to budget and balance his own income. As practical knowledge grows and develops, the individual expands his study into the related areas of the field of business. From the basic foundation laid by teachers in the typing, economics, shorthand, accounting and bookkeeping classes grow capable business leaders.

Practical experience gained from application in the classroom aids the learning process.

PI OMEGA PI

High scholarship in business and in general education courses merits membership in Pi Omega Pi. Representation at the National Pi Omega Pi Convention, joint meetings with the Business Education Club, and guest speakers kept the group alert to current problems and trends in the field of business.

EDUCATION AND PSYCHOLOGY

Dr. Frank N. Philpot, Head

Derivation of Learning

The mind and its function in affecting behavior poses as a constant puzzle to the educator. What is the best way to impart knowledge? What are the best incentives to offer for learning? The teacher must consider these questions before he can begin to communicate the knowledge gleaned from academic and methods courses. The degree to which he understands the individuals before him, recognizing the way their attitudes affect his plans for motivation, determines whether his teaching is mediocre or superior. Besides probing questions of psychology, he studies effects of class size and of teaching devices on learning. But, whether the classroom contains thirty pupils or three hundred, whether it is taught via a television set or in person, an informed, understanding teacher must be in its command.

The inquiring minds of youth begin their lengthy journey in the realm of knowledge.

KAPPA DELTA PI

Learning to consider knowledgeable matter in an aspect easily understood by the student, members of Kappa Delta Pi discussed the problems of today's educator. The fraternity broadened the views of future teachers by the exchange of international opinions at its Christmas party for foreign students.

KAPPA DELTA EPSILON

The learning experience was of particular interest to members of Kappa Delta Epsilon, honorary education sorority. Talks by faculty members and attendance at the national convention in Philadelphia relayed issues in elementary and high schools and brought insight to the teaching profession.

ELEMENTARY EDUCATION

Dr. Helen M. Nance, Head

Wondering Questions...Patient Answers

The teaching of a child is a daily venture, entailing thoughtful understanding, infinite amounts of patience, and sincere interest. The elementary teacher, using words and actions as tools, constructs the foundation upon which educations and personalities are built. The questions posed by her students demand answers which are not only factual, but which are practical, too. Instilling in the child a love of literature, an appreciation of the world around him, and an understanding of human nature are only a diminutive portion of the teacher's responsibilities. The challenge is heightened because each child is an individual. Each will determine, no matter how small his part, the progress of our nation. Thus, the elementary teacher fashions the future as she contributes to the growth of youthful minds.

A moment of rich reward when rapport comes effortlessly. Picture books provide conditioning for aesthetic development.

ENGLISH

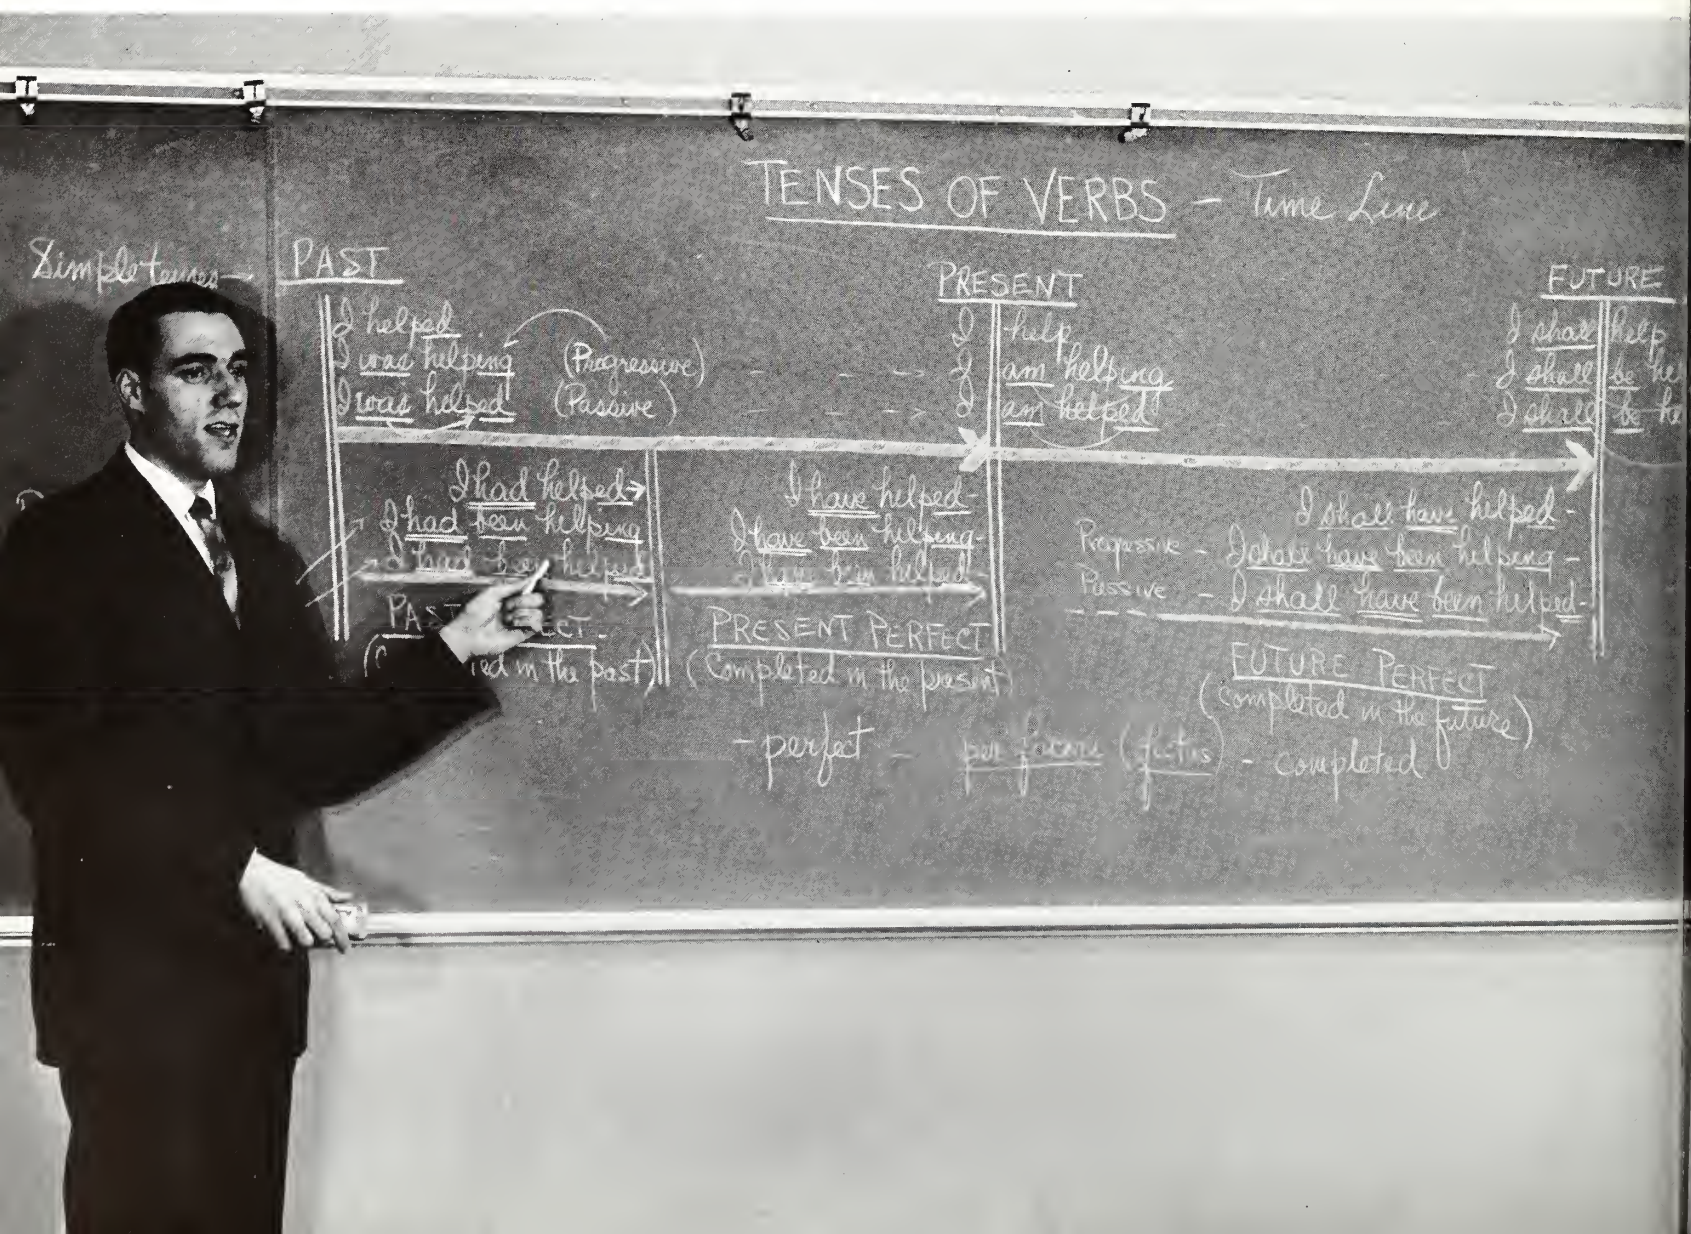

Dr. Victor E. Gimmestad, Head

Ideas Derived, . . .

Profound thoughts may shape destinies. In the English teacher's grasp lies the opportunity to make known the profound thoughts of the ages. To him, the undying messages found in classical works become applicable today. He studies, not only to be able to impart his own interpretations, but to give his students background so that they may adequately interpret for themselves. The formation of new ideas finds expression through writing, for which a knowledge of the structure of words and their usage is fundamental. Whether one studies grammar in the traditional deductive manner or in the structural linguist's inductive approach, his acquired skills are basic to communication. Through interpretation and expression, the teacher of English functions as a mediator between our language and his students.

Verbs, when shown in relation to time, seem not quite so confusing. To visualize a grammatical concept makes it clearer.

Thoughts Expressed

SIGMA TAU DELTA

To broaden a scope of the arts, Sigma Tau Delta comprises a fellowship for its majors, who seek a mastery of tongue and an acquaintance with worthy literature. Members submit original compositions to their national magazine, The Triangle, and experience the distinction of creativity for the printed page.

FOREIGN LANGUAGE

Dr. Frank D. Horvay, Head

Cultures Reflected in Dialects

From ancient Rome, to musical Spain, formal Germany, aesthetic France, or stately Russia, the sounds of languages characterize the atmosphere and people of their native countries. Into words are translated thoughts and ideas; but even more vital are the expressions of emotion and character revealed in different tongues. Prejudice and misunderstanding disappear when one discovers the similarities and truths conveyed in the words common to the peoples of foreign countries. Not only does the foreign language teacher make possible fluency in a second tongue; he teaches the culture and beliefs of a country other than ours. Through understanding, he guides his students one step nearer a peaceful world existence.

Not only a country's language denotes nationality, but also the costuming gives visual representation.

FOREIGN LANGUAGE CLUB

The annual Foreign Language Club Christmas party offered its membership an opportunity to observe the sacred holiday in the traditions of five different nations. This event reflected the purpose of the club: the promotion of understanding through study of cultures and their languages.

GEOGRAPHY

Dr. Arthur W. Watterson, Head

The Essence: Environment

From the very beginning, the environment has been a source of intrigue to man. He has had to pool theories, laws, and data in gaining knowledge about his world. These facts, the science of geography, have close correlation with human existence; for the forces exerted by the natural world control the way in which man lives. Through application of knowledge, man adjusts to his surroundings and modifies them by co-operating with nature. As the geographical scope broadens to encompass all factors of environment, its study becomes more complex, its significance more meaningful. Aware of the many aspects involved in his study, the teacher leads his students to a deeper appreciation of the world in which we live.

Intent upon a study of geological deformations in the United States, the student reproduces a tectonic map.

GAMMA THETA UPSILON

Maintaining interest in geography, Gamma Theta Upsilon presented a variety of discussion topics. The programs ranged from talks on forestry in northern Michigan to solar eclipses and were designed to strengthen training in geography and to advance the professional status of geography as a practical subject.

Sunny spring days bring the tennis season and provide for an enthusiastic class's inauguration of the new courts.

HEALTH and PHYSICAL EDUCATION

MEN'S - - Dr. Clifford E. Horton, Head

Intelligent minds and healthy bodies are links in the chain of a nation's well-being. Recognizing that programs of fitness depend upon competently trained coaches and recreation directors, the Physical Education Department at ISNU conducts its efforts toward providing coaches skilled in training mind and body. Men, instructed in activities they will teach, learn from participation as well as from books. Classroom studies provide theories of sports and general knowledge that competency as a teacher demands.

In 1961, the department's development was heralded by completion of plans for a field house. This year also marked the retirement of the department head. Dr. Clifford E. Horton ended thirty-eight years of service as mentor to students who were training to become competent coaches and teachers.

WOMEN'S - - Dr. Ellen D. Kelly, Head

Education consists of more than developing the mind, for the mind is most conducive to learning when one is in good physical condition. As a result of a tri-fold learning process, the body develops in coordination, endurance, and fitness. Through careful planning by staff members, the student moves from accelerating activity classes, to analytical academic courses, to thought-provoking theory courses in physical education. All that she gleans from these courses is combined and formulated into basic principles which make up her own philosophy for teaching. The mind advances from learning the mechanics of doing, to learning the principles of teaching. The senior student recognizes the value of planning and scheduling classes best fitted to needs: those classes which cultivate mental and physical fitness.

A pattern of outstretched arms and lowered heads indicates balance in learning and applying the principles of body mechanics.

KAPPA OMICRON PHI

Household maintenance becomes a skill to the women of Kappa Omicron Phi, who delve more deeply than to acquire a knowledge of cooking and sewing alone. Entertaining at the Rambo Home Management House with informal teas brought together home economics majors of above average scholastic standing.

HOME ECONOMICS

The Ultimate . . . Efficiency

Soft candlelight, crystalline glass, and shining silver on linen present an exquisite picture, but are only minor aspects of the homemaker's role. The success of a meal demands more than an elaborate setting. It involves organization, precision timing, and careful budget planning. Consideration is given to the nutritional value of foods and their correlation in the day's menu with the Basic Four Food Chart. The efficient homemaker also considers the value of textiles in her home. Their use may entail a microscopic study of fibers for durability and analyzation of textures, colors, and patterns.

By creating an atmosphere of order, cleanliness, and congruity of furnishings, the home economist transforms her knowledge into a smoothly operating organization—whether it be her classroom or her home.

A study of the nutrient value of foods, an integral phase of the homemaker's training, leads to this discovery that size is deceiving.

INDUSTRIAL ARTS

Dr. Ray M. Stombaugh, Head

Design in Construction

The socio-economic problems of a highly developed society are closely related to its industrial growth. In solving such problems, the teacher trains his students to advance and improve the processes and methods of production. A portion of this improvement comes from the knowledge of a practical use of science, mathematics, and draftsmanship. However, a conscientious instructor knows that experimentation with mechanics alone will not lead to significant discoveries in his field. Therefore, students are given the opportunity in class to experiment with their original ideas; for it is from the merging of mechanical and mental adeptness that come the industrial successes of a progressing nation.

Reflections of concentration and the desire to achieve perfection mirror faces as students operate the printing press.

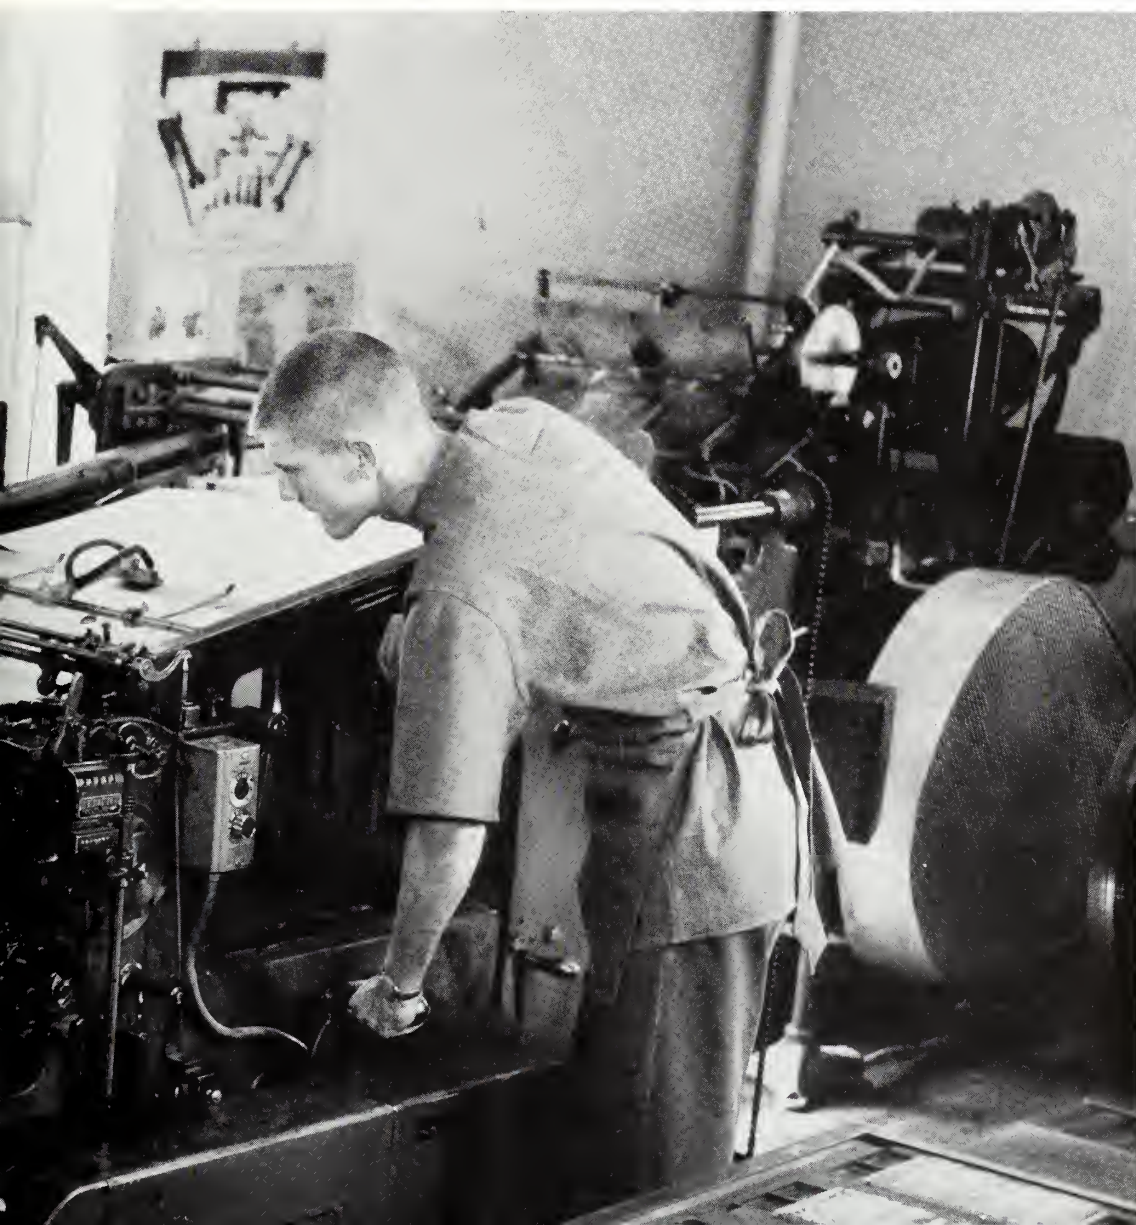

IOTA LAMBDA SIGMA

To further the understanding of the profession, Iota Lambda Sigma, honorary industrial arts fraternity, brought prominent speakers in their field to its meetings. Fellowship among members was promoted by the annual Homecoming reception for alumni and the initiation of new members in the fall.

LIBRARY SCIENCE

Dr. Robert R. Hertel, Head

Bridge to Understanding

Men and women from all eras have written down meaningful experiences and inspired creations of their minds. The powers of the written word are many: it is studied in relation to the reader's needs; it enlarges his vocabulary; it affiliates historical events with present-day happenings; and it permits a deep understanding of human nature. Through a study of literature, the student vicariously broadens the scope of his knowledge. Training to be a teacher-librarian, he has the opportunity to guide the youth of America to fruitful reading. For each individual there are books ready to share depth of beauty and thought, ready to offer intrigue and encouragement, and ready to lighten the pathway to the future. The quest is his.

The Treasure Room in Milner Library houses a wealth of rare books and manuscripts which lend intrigue to research and study.

ALPHA BETA ALPHA

Members of Alpha Beta Alpha share a common interest in the field of library science. A visit to Withers Library, a study of libraries in surrounding communities and of children's books, plus an observance of National Library Week gave students practical application of facts learned in the classroom.

MATHEMATICS

Dr. Clyde T. McCormick, Head

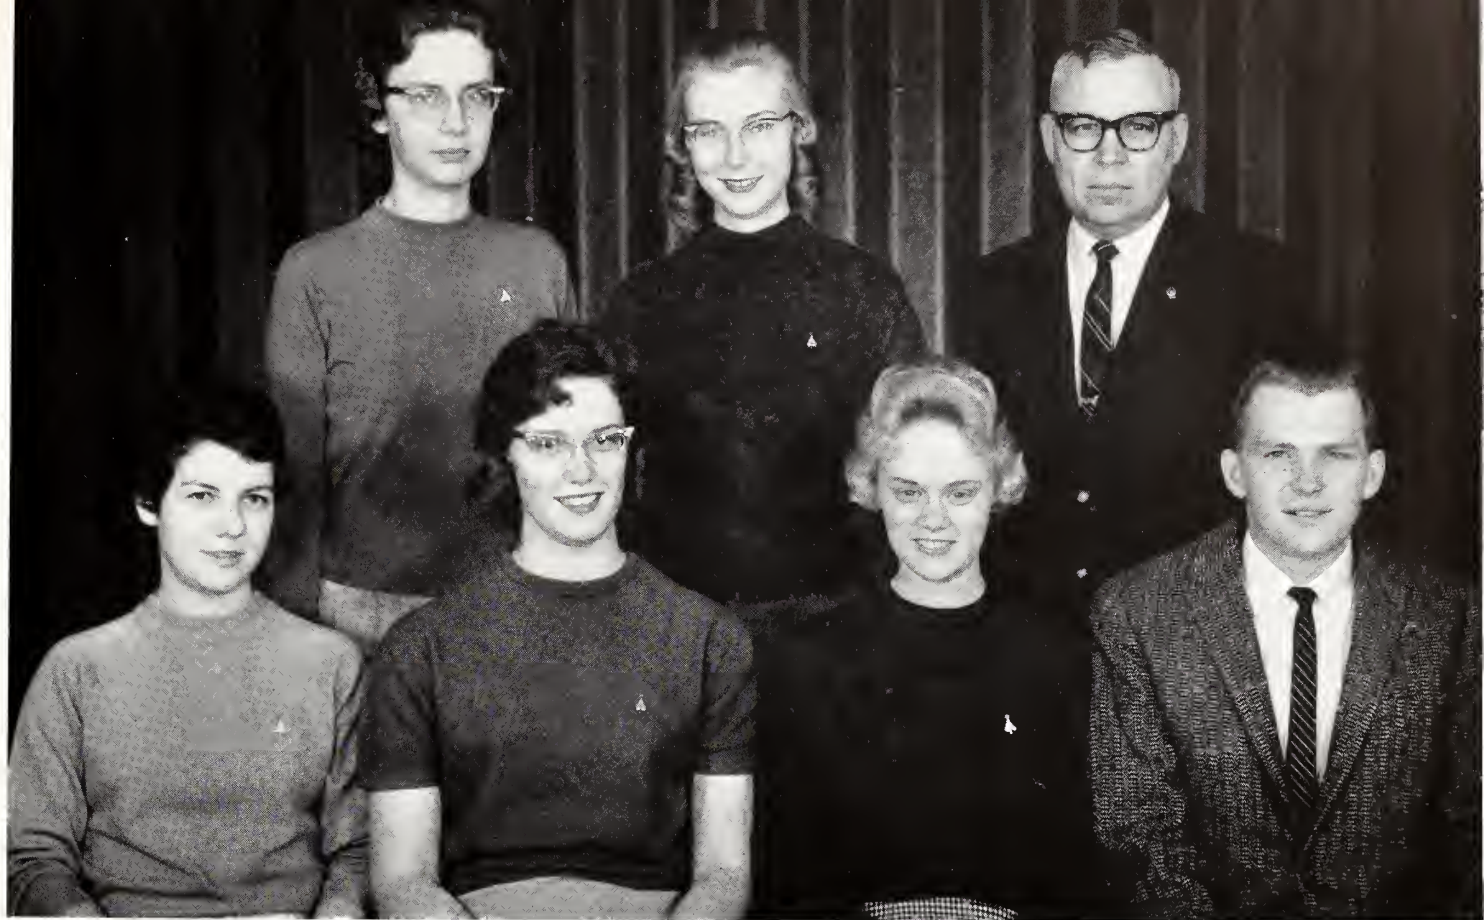

Measures of Advancement

Mathematics, in its modernity, is unlike the field of years past. It has been categorized as the Latin language of the sciences, a system of unchanging symbols joined with permanent sets of equations. Now, unlike Latin, mathematics has adapted itself, along with the other sciences, to the flow of progress. Calculus, taught in the curricula of many high schools, is no longer a strictly advanced course. On the university level, instructors do not offer for credit first year courses in algebra and trigonometry. Set theory, an integral part of mathematics, creates a symbolic language—a type of shorthand by which entire sentences emerge from symbols. Course alterations at ISNU are adapted to these modern concepts of knowledge, producing mathematics teachers who are cognizant of advances in the field.

The maze of symbols looks confusing, but under a professor's guidance, is transformed into a practical mathematics equation.

KAPPA MU EPSILON

The original goal of furthering student interest in mathematics and its problems has made our campus chapter largest in the nation. With this distinction comes added responsibility to the national organization. In 1961, the ISNU mathematics honorary sponsored the sectional meeting of Kappa Mu Epsilon.

MUSIC

Dr. Howard H. Rye, Head

Lyrics Resound

Ideas, thoughts, and feelings manifest themselves in universal symbols of music which soothe and stimulate, entertain and provoke thought, or transport us to other lands. Although self-expression is vital, the musician does more than give his own interpretations, speaking to people of any time or place. Whatever its aesthetic value, the grammar of music plays a significant role in the final achievement. The written sounds—a note, clef, flat or sharp—comprise the factors in an accurate repetition of the composer's ideas and feelings. A student learns not only to use music intelligently, but also to translate what has been written before him, to interpret it, and to originate an expression of his own.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE

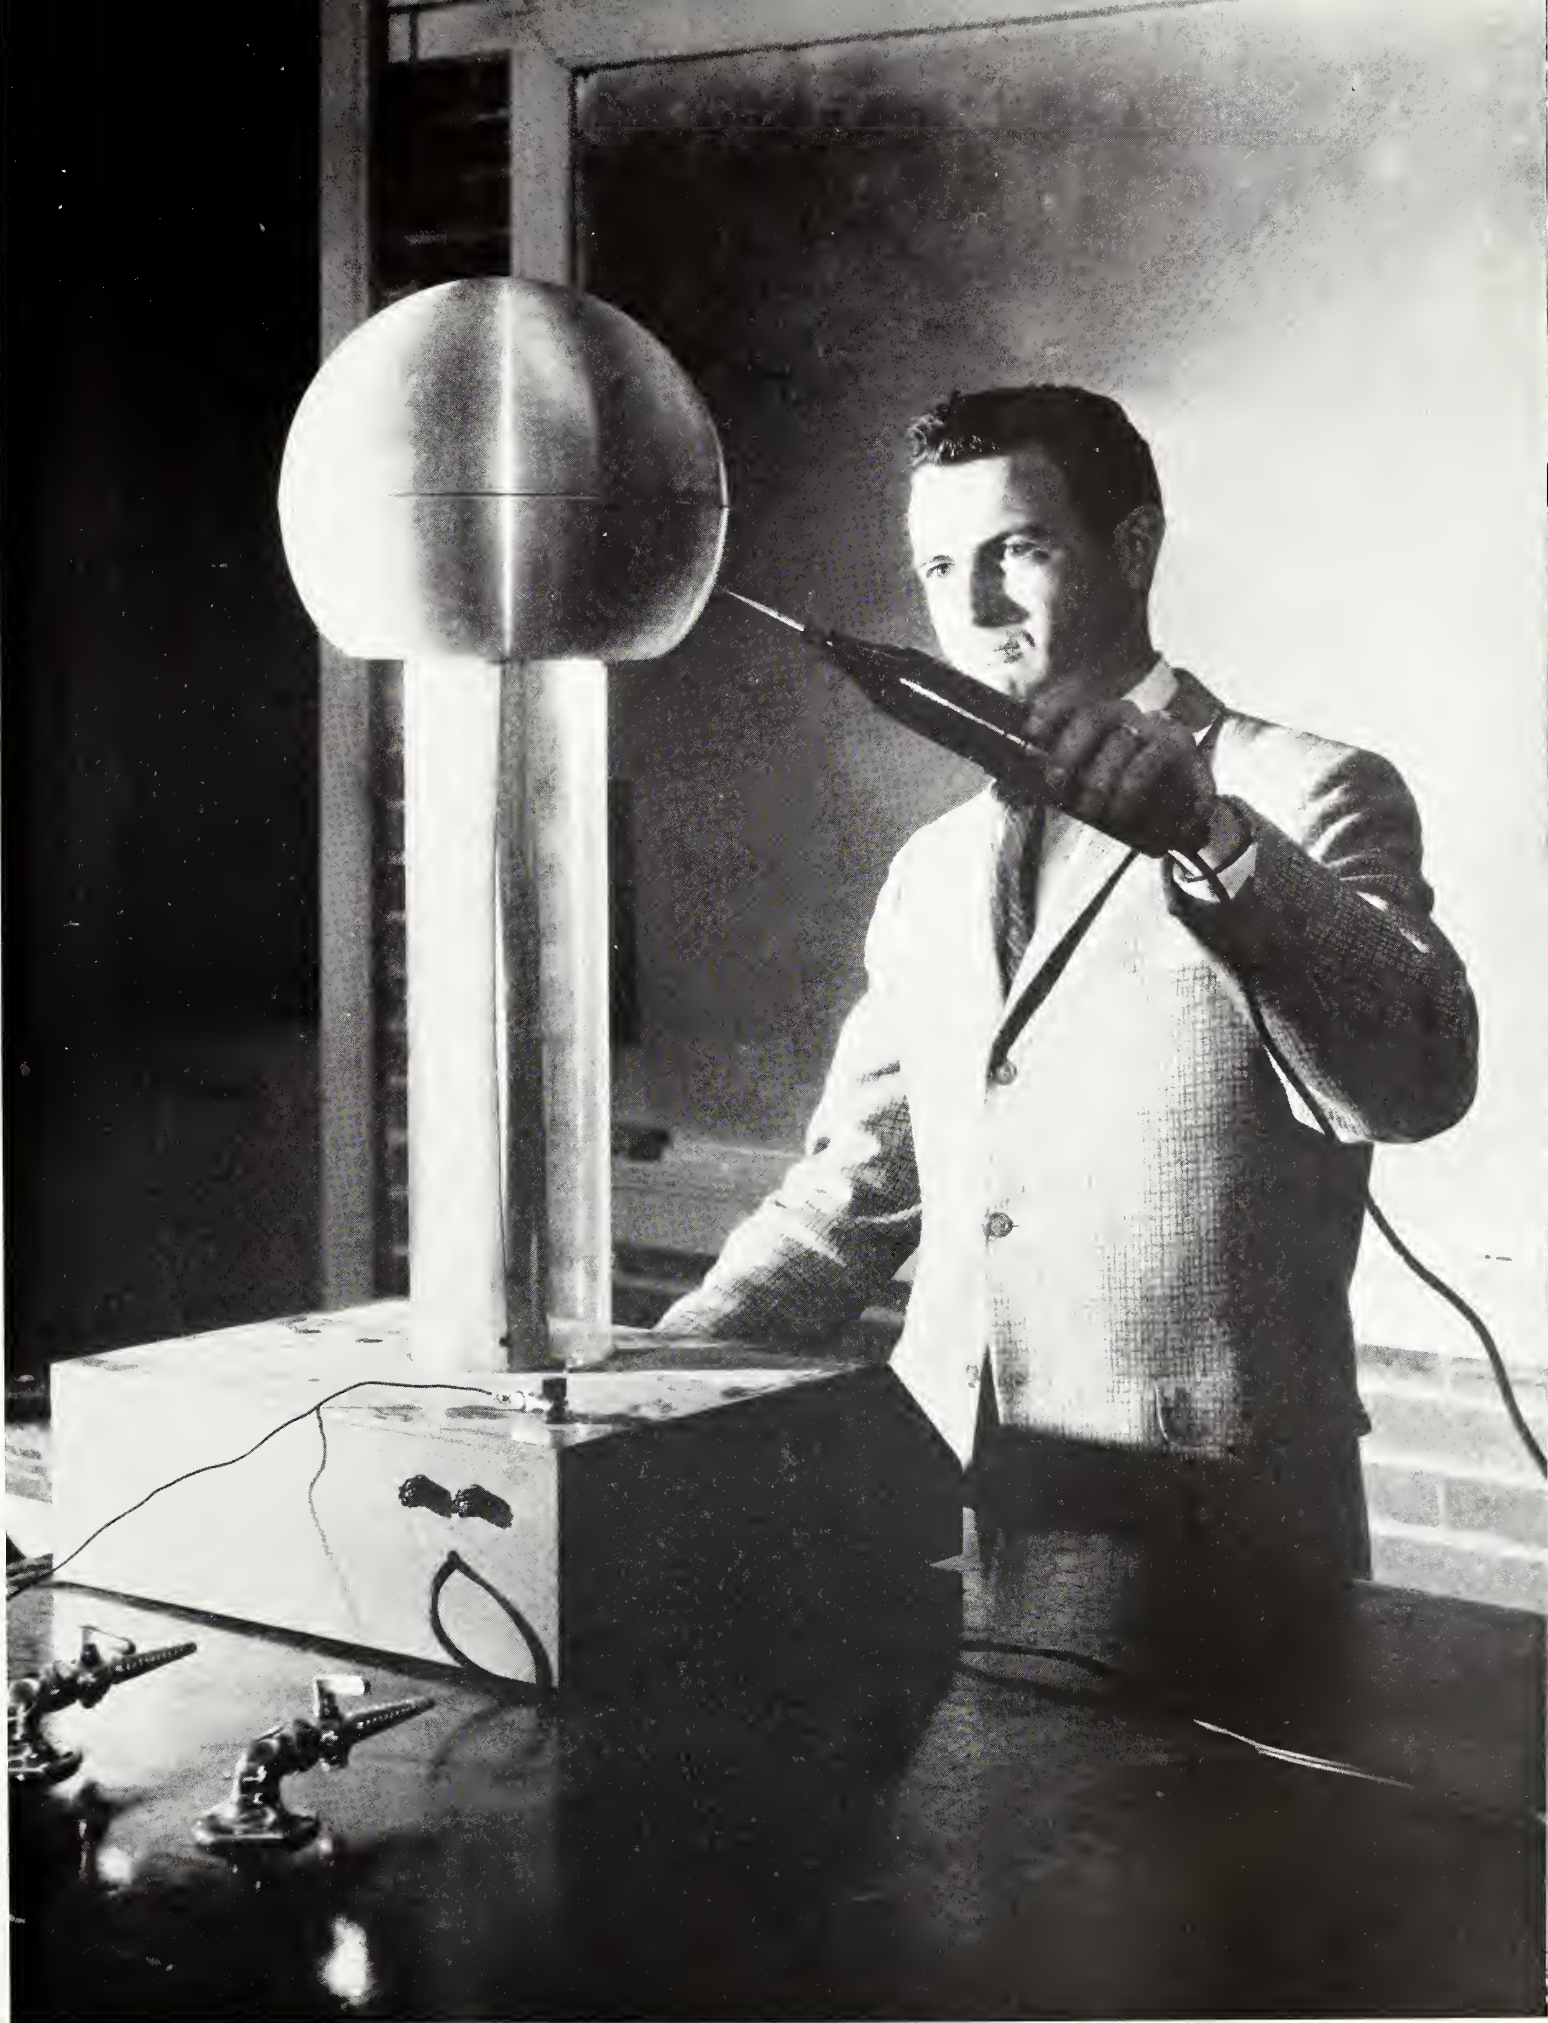

Dr. Bernard L. Ryder, Head

Probing Laws

Organized study of science better enables students to understand the universe. A practical administration of scientific principles is prerequisite to a grasp of the relationships between theory and application. A study of atomic theory and chemical analysis leads to a widening comprehension of the immense solar system and the earth's motions in space. Experimentation in the laboratory is designed to test learned principles, to establish conclusions through logical reasoning, and to strengthen, modify, or abandon these conclusions. The abstract principles learned in the classroom become clear and valuable to physical science majors and minors who, in teaching, will have a solid frame of reference.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE CLUB

Space exploration, biology radiation, and cellulose products were topics discussed by representatives from Argonne Laboratories and the Rand Tool and Die Corporation at Physical Science Club meetings. Through discussions of issues in their field, students gained supplementary aids to teaching.

Experimentation with a Van de Graaff generator illustrates concepts in the field of physical science.

SOCIAL SCIENCE

Dr. Benjamin J. Keeley, Head

Theories from Society

Man lives in a world called society. Using a set of principles concerning the family, state, and race, he attempts to understand his environment. To facilitate living, man establishes institutions and communities in the light of what has gone before—and in this light, he ponders problems of civilization. He seeks a pattern in a complex set of human phenomena through study and observation of those around him, and, once he finds this pattern, he is able to make predictions. Sociology, political science, history, and economics fall into their respective places and become a basis for man's understanding of himself. Thus, a science is formed which enables man to govern the elements of human conduct.

Through election return comparisons, a social science major attempts to formulate the voting trend from past to present.

PI GAMMA MU

A talk on Red China, a demonstration of primitive music, and a study of election results were topics presented to social science majors and minors. At meetings and informal gatherings, they increased their understanding of man and his culture and formed closer relationships between students and faculty.

For some students the steps of learning present obstacles, but hours of patient instruction and determination bring rewards.

SPECIAL EDUCATION

Dr. Harold R. Phelps, Head

That All May Benefit

Like a road map that has numerous routes leading to the same destination, the special education teacher has many approaches to his goal of intellectual growth and maturity. The purpose remains constant: to educate every child, regardless of the severity of his handicap. The approach is adapted to the individual needs of the student. By using specialized tools, the child, whether he is blind, hard of hearing, physically handicapped, mentally retarded, or speech defective, learns that he can be a useful contribution to society. With apperception, the teacher of special education guides each child to realize that, although the method by which he learns differs from that of his classmates, the goal is the same.

SPEECH

Dr. Charles A. White, Head

Voicing Word and Thought

In everyday life, in almost every situation, man calls upon his power of speech to share ideas and experiences—to create and deepen understandings among his fellow men. To exercise the art of speech, man studies its basic principles. He learns and practices them to make himself a better interpreter and user of words. He alerts himself against twisted concepts and false propaganda. To an informed person, speech is a significant defense in our complex society. No man need be manipulated or fooled if he can distinguish between the false and the true in the spoken word. Benefiting from the teacher's guidance, the student develops his potentiality and increases his power to speak and act intelligently.

By suggesting character, setting, and mood, the oral interpreter creates mental images from the printed word.

Student Teaching . . .

The senior at Illinois State Normal University inevitably finds himself in one of the most important classrooms of his college preparation. This classroom differs from most he has attended. For it, women wear high-heeled shoes and men don suits and ties. Upon entering it, the senior does not take a seat and sit poised, waiting to take notes from his instructor. Instead, he walks to the front of the classroom to give his knowledge to the sea of faces before him. He is the student teacher; and the classroom is his own, whether it be filled with restive third graders, energetic adolescents in junior high, or the combination of fun-loving and serious pupils known as high schoolers. Registered on his record of transcripts, the classroom is Student Teaching, 210.

It is the student's decision whether he will go off campus or stay in one of the University's laboratory schools. For the fifty per cent who elect to go off campus, the decision entails nine weeks of teaching, with a load double that of the student who stays on campus to do his teaching all semester. For both, however, the experience does not end after delivering the day's lesson. There are PTA and faculty meetings to attend, tickets to collect at basketball games, youngsters to supervise in study halls, and numerous extra-curricular clubs and activities to help direct. Even more than the students who teach at the University laboratory schools, those who go off campus experience the feeling of becoming an active part of a new community. The student, no matter where he does his practice teaching, attends professional meetings which supplement knowledge and introduce him to experienced people in his chosen vocation.

The classroom training is an approach to a profession. As the goal becomes nearer, the attainment of its end—an efficient, well-prepared teacher—is guided by the supervising instructor, who quietly listens to and watches the student teacher's performance. At conferences, evaluations are given and discussions held which include a multitude of subjects, from the excellence or deficiency of the day's lesson plan to the ways of motivating a slow learner who sits sullenly at the back of the room. The student discovers practical ways of presenting material and discards methods which he thought would have stimulated, but did not. A follow-up discussion of the day's lesson helps him understand his class and profit from his mistakes. These meetings, combined with the student's actual teaching, encourage critical thinking and cause learning to be a reciprocal process, with knowledge being both given and received.

Not every student teacher is confident during the first week. Most are eager to put accumulated knowledge into practice, but many are hesitant when facing their class for the first time, cognizant of the responsibility that they have to waken interest and kindle enthusiasm in approximately thirty young, developing minds. With experimentation and practice, confidence grows. Discipline could be a problem and sometimes requires sharper measures than a reprimand or a warning flash of eyes. Once the line is drawn that distinguishes the teacher as both disciplinarian and friend, once the students know that they will be treated with kindness and respect, problems are diminished. The first week is important, for it is during this time that the teacher establishes his ability to command a class.

The old adage "patience is a virtue" could aptly be directed to the student teacher. There are days when progress seems nil, when attention spans are at their lowest ebbs, and when the eyes of the entire class register boredom. The wise teacher expects no miracles; his patience is rewarded when just one child's eyes mirror comprehension. Closely related to patience and equally important in the teacher's makeup is a sense of humor. Being able to smile when a carefully prepared lesson plan, in theory designed to take the whole hour, in practice, takes only thirty minutes; containing oneself when a witty student makes a humorous remark midway through a serious discussion; genially recognizing that the community's eyes are constantly upon him—the alert student teacher is prepared for any situation, and his sense of humor and ability to get along with others are assets.

From the day he enters a school as "that new teacher" to the day he retires, the student never stops gaining in knowledge and understanding. Practice teaching, the culmination of four years of university study, bridges the chasm between student and teacher. An approach to a profession, it is but the beginning of a teacher's intellectual development, a step into the higher plane of responsibility and dedication.

in Application and Observance.

Not an easy task, the study of pupil reaction discloses thoughts and feelings, an insight into character.

The Mind Matures

More than giving his own knowledge to a class, the student teacher prepares its members for capably directing activity.

Miss Winegarner, mentor and director, chats informally with Mr. Ageili.

An International Exchange . . .

Education denotes brotherhood for the people of many nations who study in our country. The foreign student program at ISNU includes those students who come at their own expense and those who come through the Office of Education in Washington, D.C. Before their admittance into the University, these students and teachers must pass severe competitive examinations in their home countries. This year, undergraduates from Greece, Mexico, Viet Nam, and the Union of South Africa joined us in campus activities. Graduate students represented the countries of Greece, Iraq, and Liberia. The foreign visitors did more than take information with them; they left a wealth of knowledge for their new friends.

The Graduate Student . . .

To its recipients, a Bachelor of Science degree in Education signifies the end of four years of undergraduate study, yet for some, the entrance into a second plane of higher learning—that of graduate study. In graduate school, the vital, driving force that is education results in mature study of a problem relevant to the individual's professional career. Since the summer session of 1944, the University has conferred Master of Science in Education degrees upon competent teachers, guidance and personnel workers, school administrators, and supervisors, after completion of thirty-two semester hours of graduate work.

Illinois State Normal University offers advantages to the post-graduate which facilitate his concentrated study. Milner Library is equipped with carrels in the stack area, where the student may study while having access to source books. Delicate instruments and equipment required for scientific experiments are found in Felmley Hall of Science. Fairchild Hall houses facilities for advanced work in special education, as well as being the source of counseling and testing programs inherent in the study of psychology. Students are further aided by assistantships and scholarships available for their use.

Specialized courses culminate in the writing of either a thesis or two research papers. As the student attains scholarly authorship, he recognizes that there is no excuse for illogical thinking and that mediocrity must not be an attribute of the educator. He must draw and defend conclusions, not only in the papers he writes, but also in the written or oral examination he takes to qualify for the master's degree. Then perseverance, a sense of self-improvement, and professional status become known to him.

SENIORS

The effective teacher's education consists of a synthesis of the academic and social. Outstanding seniors at Illinois State Normal University are an example of the perfection of this blend. Their recognition derives from the maintenance of a B average and the display of leadership and character traits in extracurricular activities. Before selection, the six hundred and twenty-five members of the class receive applications upon which they record grade averages and participation in activities. From the forms submitted, the Student Senate chooses the recipients of the award. This year nineteen seniors won commendation from both the administration and the student body. Gratifying, also, is the pride that comes to families and home communities through the accomplishments of these students. A climactic event which honors them is the annual tea given by President Bone. His presentation of a pen, inscribed with the year of their particular award, gives them a tangible symbol of the regard that is their due.

Projection to the Future . . .

With student teaching ending four years of the frustrations and joys of college life, seniors prepared to transfer their knowledge to their pupils. But before graduation, the Senior Advisory Board still had last-year obligations to complete. JUNIOR ADVISORY BOARD

Education in Aiding . . .

Their own education nearing its final year, juniors became interested in the education of others. With funds provided by the Junior Advisory Board, they repeated last year's offer of class scholarships. In addition to these awards, they sponsored a fund drive to finance a year of study on the ISNU campus for a student from Tanganyika, East Africa. Proceeds from the Women's League Carnival initiated the $5500 project, which was under the direction of the president, Joe DeSilvestro, mathematics major from Marseilles; the vice-president, Mina Jackson, special education major from Troy Grove; the secretary, Karen Nally, music major from Gibson City; and the treasurer, Pat Harland, elementary major from Quincy.

Introduction to the Social . . .

A year of college life to their credit, sophomores could now adequately plan and organize their time. Enthusiastically supporting activities, Sophomore Advisory Board directed the construction of the Queen's Homecoming float and planned one of the prominent dances of the year, the Sophomore Cotillion. The class was led by Bob Milnes, president and social science major from Steger; Carl Williams, vice-president and social science major from Chicago; Sharon Shaner, secretary and special education major from Bradford; and Wallie Wheeler, treasurer and Spanish major from Waukegan. Social acquaintances paired with profitable financial ventures constituted a successful second year for the Class of 1963.

FRESHMAN ADVISORY BOARD

Direction in Adjustment . . .

Freshman representatives faced adjustment both to the responsibilities of government and to the requirements of college life. Elected by their peers, the board received direction from a faculty adviser. By intelligently adhering to advice and suggestions, members boasted a sound financial beginning and devised a four-year constitution. First-year leaders were president Jim Matzen, a physical science major from Clinton; vice-president Carol Bruno, a special education major from Maywood; secretary Marlene Andalman, an art major from Skokie; and treasurer Judy Ann Jepsen, an elementary education major from Bourbonnais. Participation led to an understanding of the policies of campus life, both governmental and social.

The Staff . . .

To picture student, then teacher has been our attempt in the 1961 Index. The senior completes this transition.

Ours was not the effort of one or two, but a staff effort. Especially, though, I thank my assistant editor, Joy Knox, who found herself with more work than that known by many assistant editors. It was Joy who put this book together during the nine weeks of my student teaching off campus.
